Washtenaw County sewage plan protested

By JIM CARAVALLAH
Roman Staff Writer

Spokesmen for the Wayne County Road Commission and local communities are protesting a move by the Michigan Water Resources Commission which would provide "clean" waterways in Washtenaw County at the expense of the possible pollution of Wayne County water courses.

During a hearing before the state water resources board last week, spokesmen from the road commission protested a "Washtenaw County-only" sewage treatment plan approved by the state agency as a means to provide some federal matching funds for the construction of sewage treatment facilities in southeastern Michigan.

The road commission spokesmen protested the approval of the commission which would in effect void the so-called "supersewer" waste water treatment plan promoted by the road commission and communities such as Canton, Romulus, Huron and Van Buren as a means to upgrade the water quality of the Huron River until at least the year 2000.

The "supersewer" plan called for the construction of a massive waste water treatment system that would divert sewage flow from eastern Washtenaw County, western and southern Wayne County and southwestern Oakland County into a massive 60-mile underground system to a plant in Flat Rock.

Road Commission spokesmen have promoted the plan as a means to satisfy federal and state requirements that a "region-wide" waste water treatment system be constructed to provide efficient and safe disposal of sewage until the year 2000 throughout the southeastern Michigan region.

However, the plan met opposition from the Washtenaw County communities in particular because of a traditional distrust of the road commission, and a desire to retain autonomous control over their own sewage treatment and independence from regional government concepts.

Washtenaw County's decision to propose a county-only plan to the water resources board came after better than five years of infighting among communities from the three counties over the supersewer plan. During that time, the deadline for applying for federal funds to finance the $300 million construction project approached, and state water resources planners feared that funds would not be available for any construction by the time some decision was made.

The Washtenaw County-only approval was made less than two months ago as a means to obtain some federal funding for at least part of the sewage treatment program.

However, the plan calls for Washtenaw County to dump its treated waste into the Willow Run, which empties into Belleville Lake near the Van Buren Park. Township officials fear that inadequate waste treatment could result in the fouling of the Huron River.

Canton community planners had hoped that the "supersewer" plan would be implemented because it would call for the construction of a massive storm conduit through the eastern reaches of the township, providing the area with a more efficient disposal system at a lower cost than a system financed entirely with Canton funds.

Primary election is Tuesday

By JIM CARAVALLAH
Roman Staff Writer

It isn't only local elections area voters will wrestle with on the Aug. 3 primary election ballot.

They also will have to tackle the chore of selecting candidates seeking offices at the county state and national levels.

In Romulus, voters will be asked to iron out the choice among two Democrats for the 26th Wayne County Commission seat where Edgar Harris is the 3-year incumbent.

Harris, a Democrat, is being opposed by Donald L. Zub, while Dorothy M. Rush is assured of a spot on the November general election ballot by virtue of being the only Republican in the primary.

In Belleville and Van Buren Township, voters will have to make their choices among both Democratic and Republican candidates for Wayne County's 27th Commission District — a post presently occupied by Royce Smith.

The Democrat has held the post for the past two years.

Opposing Smith is Walter T. Hink, while Republicans Owen G. Arrowsmith and Coleman F. Flakamp II will seek their party's nomination.

Also at the county level, citizens will choose between Democrats and Republicans for such posts as prosecuting attorney, sheriff, clerk, treasurer, register of deeds, drain commissioner and auditor.

Incumbent Wayne County Prosecuting Attorney William L. Cahalan is running unopposed in the Democratic primary while Republicans Allen J. Counard and C. Michael Kimber will fight it out to see who will oppose Cahalan in the general election this November.

Incumbent County Sheriff William L. Lucas is being challenged by Robert L. Harbour and Julius M. Vida on the Democratic ballot, while Robert L. Slaughter is running as the lone Republican and is assured of opposing the Democratic winner in November.

James R. Killeen, incumbent county clerk, is being opposed by Robert D. Miller on the Democratic ballot while Charles G. Miller is running opposed as the Republican side nominee.

In the treasurer's race, Clark G. Finley, Johnny Edward Warren, L. M. Ford and Raymond J. Wojtowicz will spar for the Democratic nomination, while Jeffery Erman is unopposed in the Republican primary.

The late Louis Funk was the incumbent treasurer, but chose not to seek reelection just prior to his death earlier this summer.

In the race for register of deeds, Julius Adam Dudzinski and incumbent Forest E. Youngblood will go after the Democratic nod, while Robert J. Lundh and Howard Thompson will vie for the Republican nomination.

The county drain commissioner contest pits incumbent Charles N. Youngblood against challengers Robert Lincoln, Arthur W. Sumeracki and Terry L. Troutt on the Democratic ballot, while George M. Cully will run unopposed on the Republican side of the ledger.

Incumbent County Auditor Ted Mrozowski will be opposed by Blair J. McGowan, Walter P. Murawski, Lucas S. Smith and Gerald S. Sumeracki on the Democratic ballot, while Mary B. Beirne is the lone Republican seeking nomination.

At the state level voters will participate in a type of "straw vote" in the 32nd District and will choose among three Democrats in the 38th District.

Incumbent Gary M. Owen is running unopposed for the 22nd District Democratic nomination, while Republican Robert E. Baldwin is likewise running unopposed in the primary.

The 22nd District includes all of Van Buren Township, Belleville and one precinct in Romulus.

In the 38th District, incumbent Democrat Edward E. Mahalak is being opposed by James Reese Bruce and Russell H. Skidgel, while Republican Edgar R. Nielen is unopposed.

At the national level, incumbent Democrat William D. Ford from the 15th Congressional District is running unopposed for his seventh consecutive term in Congress, while Republican James D. Walaskay has no opposition.

In the U.S. Senate race, Richard M. Austin, James Leonard Elmsman, James G. O'Hara and Donald W. Riegle Jr. are vying for the Democratic nomination to fill the seat soon to be vacated by Phillip Hart, while Deane Baker, Thomas E. Brennan, Marvin L. Esch and Robert J. Huber are seeking the Republican nomination.

'Kiddie Day' to be feature at city Community Mart

This weekend's regular Romulus Community Mart will feature "Kiddie Day" at the Romulus Progressive Club Hall on Grant and Ozga Roads in Romulus across from Kennedy Park.

In conjunction with the bartering and selling, which goes on between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. each Saturday, youngsters in Romulus will have a chance to enjoy a "mini-carnival" atmosphere, during which several contests will be presented. Marilyn Radford is the program director.

The contests include judging of the child with the most freckles, child with the longest hair and the child who can blow the biggest bubble.

Also planned for the day are such events as sack races and other events suited to children of all ages. A special feature will be a "moonwalk" set up at the Mart.

During the special events, the Community Mart will feature for sale fresh produce, arts and crafts, homegrown plants and antiques on the Progressive Club parking lot.

According to Beverly McAnally, community mart chairman, growers of fresh produce came out in larger numbers than in the past, however, she still is hoping that more home growers show up this weekend.

Also set for this week is the first rehearsal for the Romulus Bicentennial Choir, made up of residents from throughout the community who will offer inspirational songs during the Aug. 28 community mart. Janet Darnell, chairman of the Bicentennial choir, is seeking musicians and singers who are not only interested in "traditional" religious music, but also popular music.

Prospective members should call Mrs. Darnell at 941-5841.

In addition, the Aug. 14 mart will feature an Artist's Day under the direction of June Blanton.

Mrs. Blanton is seeking persons from throughout the Romulus area who would either like to exhibit or sell their handicrafts during this special program.

Persons interested in participating should call Mrs. Blanton at 722-3877 to make arrangements.

The "Nostalgia Day" community mart held two weeks ago featured the completion of the annual Romulus Fire Department water-ball fight which was postponed during the community's Bicentennial picnic.

Winner of the event which pitted the city's four fire stations against each other in a round-robin competition was Fire Station Number Four.

Romulus girl second in wheelchair pageant

A Romulus girl finished as first runner-up in the Michigan Jaycee-sponsored Ms. Wheelchair Michigan Pageant held at Madonna College in Livonia.

Bonnie Scanland of 15822 Brandt Road, Romulus, finished second in the pageant which was designed to pick a spokesperson for the nearly one million handicapped persons in Michigan.

The winner was Margaret Chmielenski of Canton. The contestants were judged on their poise, personality and accomplishments despite a handicap which confines them to wheelchairs.

Ms. Scanland has spent all her life in a wheelchair due to spina bifida.

Despite the handicap, Ms. Scanland is a mother and a business school instructor.

Upon being chosen Ms. Wheelchair Michigan, Ms. Chmielenski said: "The whole experience this weekend culminated in all of the girls wishing not to win just for winning's sake, because all the girls are already winners without a pageant.

"This next year as Ms. Wheelchair Michigan should bring new people, experiences and most of all awareness of what the handicapped can do, given a chance."

Patti Karl, the 1976 Ms. Wheelchair Michigan said, "I wish Marge, all the luck and happiness in the world."

"This last year was wonderful for me, and I was lucky to have the opportunity to travel and make so many friends," Patti added.

The pageant, co-sponsored by the Mobility Awareness Team and the Livonia Jaycees featured Hilda Gage of the Michigan Civil Rights Commission as guest speaker and Mark Avery of WJR Radio as the master of ceremonies.

Family still runs 100-year-old farm

A farm, located at 51275 Judd Road, Sumpter Township and owned by two Florida residents, has joined more than 3,000 similar agricultural concerns in Michigan in netting a state honor.

The farm, owned by William and Jack Day of Largo, Fla., has been designated a centennial farm.

Farm has been in the Day Family since the late 1800s, when George Day, great-grandfather of the present owners, purchased it. The farm has been in operation since Feb. 10, 1876.

To be a centennial farm, the agricultural site must have been in the possession of the same family for 100 years or more. Other criteria includes a farm of 10 acres or more with estimated farm product sales of more than $50 or of less than 10 acres with estimated sales of at least $250.

Only the land and not the farm buildings are considered in the centennial designation. The farm building can be remodeled or even new structures.

There is currently a lawsuit in process heading for the U.S. Supreme Court, asking that the suburbs be included in a master busing plan. In spite of this, Ed Mahalak, James Bruce's opponent, voted against legislation asking that cross-district busing be outlawed by constitutional amendment.

James R. Bruce does not believe that cross-district busing improves the quality of education and only causes traumas and problems for children of either race if they are bused out of their neighborhood and into Detroit.

Mrs. Montgomery seeks VB clerk position

MARILYN MONTGOMERY

A Democrat, with over 15 years of business experience will be vying for the position of Van Buren Township clerk during the Aug. 3 primary election.

Marilyn Montgomery, 7929 Marlowe, has merited a background in business, which includes telephone operator, service dispatcher office management, administrative secretary, bookkeeping and meeting the public in general.

She is a graduate of the Van Buren Public Schools and has attended Cleary College, Eastern Michigan, and Wayne County Community College.

"Evaluating the happenings over the past 20 years made me come to the decision to run for public office," she stated. "Our community is very complex, contains so many capable and willing residents who need support and a place to coordinate their efforts. I feel that a voice on the board as an elected official I could provide a nucleus for this effort," she said.

Her hobbies and interests have brought her out as a volunteer, a worker and planner in many community projects, ranging from church, Red Cross, extension work, Politics, youth baseball, and the Van Buren Township Bicentennial.

She is married and her husband is a member of the Van Buren Township Police Department.

Let's work at it now and be ahead of the times."

"Willow Run Airport must be contained, but should be eliminated if at all possible, and our recreational facilities have to be evaluated and then utilized to the fullest."

"Work in the Bicentennial has shown me that recreation and community services could definitely be pooled to support many programs, and in the long run not only provide better services, but also become an activity for those involved."

"I need the support of every interested voter, and stand on my record — not on promises or heresay."

Voters to get 'lift'

Residents of Van Buren Township who may have difficulty getting to the polls because of transportation problems or because of the need for a babysitter can obtain free help Aug. 3.

Members of the Democratic Busch Team slate of candidates have volunteered to take voters to the polls or babysit for them Aug. 3. "It makes no difference who the people intend to vote for," said Ann Walls, spokesman for the program. "Our main concern is that the voters cast their ballots."

Arrangements for babysitting or transportation can be made by calling 697-8308 election day.

"I believe that it is now crucial...to provide the very best fire and police protection in Van Buren Township," she said. "The fire department is under much pressure to upgrade their equipment and qualifications. Both do a very good job, but it is now time to set up the very best goals and criteria for both departments. The time is past for just letting it happen."

She eyes seat on VB board

A 19-year resident of Van Buren Township who indicates she wishes to "have more input into the direction the township should take" has announced she will seek election as a Van Buren Township trustee.

Julia Sawmiller of 774 Sumpter Road, Van Buren Township, is seeking the Republican nomination for one of two trustee posts on the November ballot during the Aug. 3 primary election.

"I'm an advocate of honest government and want to promote open communication between the citizens and elected officials in the township," Mrs. Sawmiller said. "We need more local control in Van Buren government to help chart our own growth and destiny."

Mrs. Sawmiller has been active as a member of the Township Board of Review for six years and as an active participant and board member with the Van Buren Civic Association.

She is a member of the Van Buren Homeowners who are fighting to prevent the enlargement of Willow Run Airport and its possible takeover by the Wayne County Road Commission.

In addition, she has been a regular participant in the public hearings on a proposed Michigan law which would allow the Wayne County Drain Commissioner among others to increase the assessment on property owners for drain maintenance from the present maximum of $800 per mile to $2,000.

Mrs. Sawmiller has been active in the industrial and business world, working at Packard Motor Co. for nine years as an assembler, inspector and clerk, working as a manager of the clothing department in a department store, working as a medical assistant for eight years, and assisting her husband in his business, the Belleville Carpet Cleaners.

Mrs. Sawmiller is a licensed cosmetologist and works for the Torch Drive as a volunteer. She also has volunteered to aid a local cancer victim.

"I have been interested and concerned over the problems facing our township in past years and wish to have more input in the direction it takes in the future," said Mrs. Sawmiller of her campaign.

VB treasurer's seat attracts Hedman, Dem

Ralph Hedman, Democratic candidate for treasurer of Van Buren Township, kicked off his campaign with a speech to his volunteers about performance in township government.

"I believe that the job of township treasurer requires fulltime performance, to insure proper return to

Heifner: Trustee hopeful

A 49-year-old electrical foreman is hoping to garner one of four spots for the general election in the race for two Van Buren Township trustee positions.

George Heifner, who is employed by a major electrical contractor in Detroit, is seeking the nod on the Republican ticket. Married, he and his wife and three children live at 41527 Edison Lake Road.

A graduate of Ecorse High School, he presently is enrolled in law enforcement classes at Wayne County Community College.

A veteran of World War II and the Korean conflict, Heifner presently is serving as sergeant major of a helicopter squadron in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserves.

Heifner feels he has proven his leadership ability and his concern for the people of the township by reacting to their needs through many hours of volunteer time, including service as Civil Defense coordinator for the township, and conducting certified Red Cross First Aid classes, not only for the Police and Fire Departments, but for interested citizens.

He also conducted Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation classes for the Michigan Heart Association in the community and served as Bicentennial Parade chairman for the past 1 1/2 years.

He now is completing his second 2-year term as constable.

He has served on the township water and sewer commission for the past three years and as the chairman of that commission for the past year.

Heifner believes that residents of the community want a voice in their government and that they should be heard. He also believes if one takes the time to be concerned with the taxpayers feelings and opinions, then the township will continue the ability for self-rule and function without the control or direction from the county.

the taxpayers of Van Buren Township. We need efficient management and sound administration, to avoid duplication and waste often typical of township government," Hedman said.

Hedman served as treasurer of Van Buren Township during 1972-74 and is currently a legislative representative to the Michigan State Treasurers' Association.

He is a former fire commissioner and has been active in the following community groups: the Board of Directors of Belleville Kiwanis Board of Directors, Disabled American Veterans, Van Buren Estates Civic Association, Citizens' Health Care Advisory Council for Belleville, Sumpter and Van Buren townships, and a leader in Boy and Girl Scouts.

He has been appointed chairman of the legislative subcommittee of the SEMTA Steering Committee on Transportation for the Handicapped and Elderly. He is also a Vice-President of the National Association of Physically Handicapped Organization.

"My administrative background and experience might prove to be unique assets, while fulfilling the duties of this office," Hedman said. "I plan to devote full-time effort to the job. Our current treasurer is only serving on a part-time basis, without providing enough service for the residents of Van Buren Township. I intend to maintain constant communications with the people, by providing the necessary information about taxes and budgets."

"In addition, my contacts with state and federal officials, allow me to solve problems that otherwise might be allowed to continue under the current treasurer. Recently my efforts, in the fight against the expansion of Willow Run Airport, have proven to be a significant contribution toward halting the takeover of the airport by the Road Commission."

"I have also fought to secure funds from the federal government for township equipment in the past. We need recreational facilities, for the residents of Van Buren Township, within the near future. I am determined to secure financing, from the federal government, for the purpose of providing recreation equipment for our children," Hedman said.

"We need representation based upon the needs of the people I intend to propose positive solutions for many of the practical problems facing the residents of Van Buren Township."

RALPH HEDMAN

'My contacts... allow me to solve problems...'

Life-long resident to face Hedman

A life-long resident of Van Buren Township has thrown her hat into the political ring as Democratic candidate for treasurer.

Mary Ann Chudzinski, 41651 Savage Rd., is a graduate of Belleville High School and later attended Wayne Community College. She has had 15 years' business and secretarial experience, which includes employment with the Federal Department of State, the University of Michigan Research Laboratories, United Air Lines and Environmental Research Institute of Michigan.

"I am not a member of any organization; therefore, my time will be devoted entirely to the responsibilities dictated by the office of the treasurer," Chudzinski said.

Some of her personal questions and interests involved with the government in Van Buren Township consist of the following: Is Van Buren Township getting full utilization of federal funds? Is full disclosure of township funds and disbursements made available to the public? What is the feeling of residents regarding township programs, such as residential and industrial development? Is there consent of the majority before these programs are initiated? A final concern deals with why meeting agendas are not made readily available to the public.

"I'm not going to make any promises just to get your vote," Chudzinski said. "Promises sometimes are broken and most often forgotten. My one and only goal is to always remember that I was elected by and work for the residents of Van Buren Township. Keeping this in mind, I will not only serve the people to the best of my ability in regard to the treasurer's office, but I will always be available to assist with any other services the township offers."

"I feel an elected official is chosen by the people of the community to serve them to the best of his or her ability. This does not mean making decisions which he or she alone feels is best, but what the majority of residents feel is best for the community. Therefore I feel more communication is necessary in our township to make people aware of what is being done."

In regards to the August 3 primary election, she said: "I urge all the registered voters of Van Buren Township to be very selective in their choices of candidates running for all local political offices. Find out about the qualifications of candidates before you vote. Make sure your vote satisfies you rather than makes you sorry in the next two years. If you all do this, Van Buren Township will continue to be a better place to live."

MARY ANN CHUDZINSKI

LeBarre sets sight on VB treasurer seat

An 11-year resident of Van Buren Township with 23 years of business and management experience will be vying for the position of treasurer during the Aug. 3 primary election.

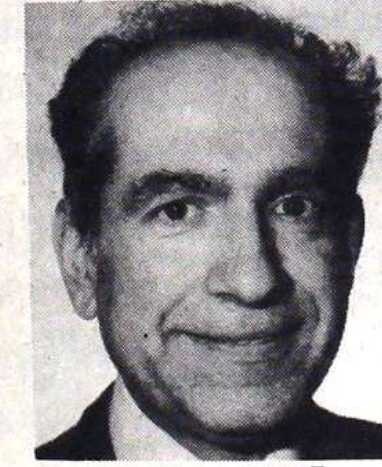

Peter A. LeBarre, Democrat, feels that, treasurer, his efforts would be directed to the integrity of that office and the trust of Van Buren citizens.

LeBarre is director of two corporations and is involved with the National Model Manufacturers Association, the Michigan Beekeepers Association, and was past president of the Michigan Manufacturers representatives Association.

He is a World War II Air Force and Korean combat veteran.

A father of five, LeBarre is a member of the Greek Orthodox Church. He also has participated in Quirk Scouting and as advisor of Wayne County 4-H Clubs.

"Experience with the operation of three active businesses, educated at Illinois Institute of Technology and Wayne State University, I know I can offer an alternative to apathy," LeBarre said.

"Management of treasury funds and township operations must be handled by officials with business acumen," he said. To do otherwise is not justifiable to our citizens and local government."

"In today's urban sprawl, communities like ours must guard against unwary local officials who may fall prey to special interests and groups."

LeBarre feels that special interests could maneuver unsuspecting local officials into situations that tax paying residents often subsidize with attendant direct and indirect losses.

In regards to his candidacy, he said, "I'm sure my neighbors realize and understand that big promises and massive campaigns often lead to little quality."

"The business of government, and in particular, local government, must utilize those most qualified from its citizens. I am qualified."

Business is favorable to on-the-job training

Initial reaction of businessmen to Wayne County's new program to split the cost with the private sector of on-the-job training of the unemployed is encouraging, according to Arthur M. Lewis, director of the Wayne County Office of Manpower.

"Once businessmen are aware that we can help them cut the cost of training new people, they are contacting our office in increasing numbers," Lewis said.

The new campaign to put more unemployed and economically disadvantaged to work provides that the Wayne County Office of Manpower reimburse private employers for half the hourly wages of on-the-job training costs of those unemployed, qualifying under Title I of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA).

"Businessmen in almost every category can participate in this program, whether they need someone to work in a factory or in an office, and in doing so cut their cost of training new employees substantially," Lewis said.

He indicated, that for example, a company hiring a sales representative at an annual base salary of $12,000 would be reimbursed approximately $2,500 for 29 weeks of on-the-job training.

Lewis said in the case of a repairman of business machines, the employer would be reimbursed about $4,300 if the trainee received an annual base salary of $10,000 and was in training for 43 weeks.

"The opportunity exists for almost all businesses, whether they need a welder in a factory or a trainee in a florist's shop," he added.

In order to be eligible to participate, employers must have a staff vacancy that they would be willing to train a participant to fill; have sufficient supervisory staff to provide on-the-job training; be in a field that does not have a large number of laid-off workers; and be willing to hire and retain the CETA participant as a regular employee.

Lewis said employers interested in participating in the program should contact the Wayne County Office of Manpower Planning Department at 224-7183.

Lottery has new '76 game

The Michigan Bureau of the State Lottery's newest game is making its debut this week, with luck ticketholders able to collect up to $1,776 weekly for a year in prizes.

The "76 Game" will last only six weeks, with regular drawings every Thursday, starting Aug. 5 and running through Sept. 9.

Each ticket contains 10 possible winning numbers that can earn a ticketholder monetary prizes ranging from $76 to $1,776 a week for a year, a total of $92,352.

Three winning numbers will be drawn each Thursday. There will be one 6-digit number, one 5-digit and one 3-digit. Matching the 3-digit number exactly will earn the ticketholder a prize of $76, while the 5-digit winner will earn $1,776, $1,976, $2,000 or $5,000.

And for the lucky holder of the winning 6-digit number the prize will be either $20,000, $25,000 $50,000 or the top prize of $1,776 every week for one year.

The red, white and blue tickets will be sold at the 8,000 lottery ticket outlets throughout the state, with new tickets going on sale each Tuesday.

The regular 50-cent ticket will continue unchanged, while the lottery's "Michigan Landmarks" Instant Game will conclude Aug. 10.

Lottery officials already are working on a new instant game.

Swimming safety must be followed

Whether you're one of Michigan's vacationers who visit lakeside resorts or who just spends time in the backyard pool, remember to follow the swimming safety rules, advises the Southeastern Michigan Chapter of the American Red Cross.

The organization is encouraging residents to learn to swim or to improve their swimming abilities in swimming and lifesaving classes.

The Red Cross also suggest that residents:

- Never swim alone;
- Swim at a safe swimming place, preferably one supervised by lifeguards;

- Do not swim when overheated or tired or immediately after eating a heavy meal;

- Do not dive without checking first to make sure that the water is deep enough for diving and that there are no swimmers below;

- Learn their limitations and stay within them;

- Have someone to accompany them if they plan to swim a long distance in open water;

- Don't depend on an inflated inner tube or toy to hold them up; and

- Get out of the water immediately if a thunderstorm threatens.

Ford hails job bill override as 'victory'

Legislation to create, or save, up to 350,000 jobs has become law after both the House of Representatives and the Senate voted to override a veto by President Gerald Ford.

A strong supporter of the $3.95 billion public works - job bill, Congressman William D. Ford (D-15th District) this week hailed the override as a significant victory in the fight to reduce the nation's mounting unemployment rate.

In an attack during House debate on the override vote, Ford ripped into the President's contention that the bill was a "give-away program" and an "election year temptation."

"It is this Administration and its conservative economic policies that are forcing federal, state and local governments to shell out billions to feed, clothe and otherwise sustain the unemployed, when for a much smaller cost they could be put back to work," Ford said. "If the unemployment rate was at 4 percent instead of 7.5 per cent, we could have a surplus in fiscal year 1977, of some $4 billion, rather than a deficit. Unemployment cost this nation at least $5 billion during the 1976 fiscal year in unemployment benefits alone."

Ford also attacked the Administration's argument that the bill would be inflationary.

"I am tired of hearing, and I know that American people are tired of hearing, the argument that inflation is a justification for keeping more than 7,000,000 Americans out of work. No reputable economist has ever supported this idea," the congressman asserted.

The bill will create some 200,000 jobs, mostly in private industry, for public works projects which have been shelved for lack of money. Another 90,000 jobs now held by state and local government employees will be preserved by a section of the bill which provides money for states and communities to maintain basic services during economic slumps. A third section authorizes money for construction of wastewater treatment plants, which will provide work for about 60,000 construction workers.

"The legislation will do all this, and a great deal more," Congressman Ford pointed out. "It will provide federal, state and local governments with increased tax revenues, while reducing the heavy cost of welfare expenditures and unemployment compensation. Businesses, large and small, will have new customers ready and able to purchase goods and services, which now are out of reach for the unemployed.

"Above all, however, will be the very real, though perhaps intangible, benefit to the jobless who will find work. The pride and security that comes with the ability to provide for themselves and their families through a job, rather than a government handout."

Congressman Ford noted that the bill authorizes money for the jobs programs, and that separate legislation actually appropriating the money still must be passed.

"I hope the President takes heed of the overwhelming votes to override his veto, and will cooperate with Congress in getting the appropriation approved, so that we can move ahead quickly with this important jobs program," Ford added.

Panel investigates constable's power

State Rep. Edward E. Mahalak (D-Romulus) has been appointed to a special House committee which will examine the powers of the office of constable.

According to Mahalak, the committee will review present laws which relate to constables and report its findings and recommendations back to the Legislature by the end of the year.

"Present law permits Michigan constables to perform a wide variety of criminal and civil duties," Mahalak said. "There are more than 290 sections of the Michigan Compiled Laws which confer responsibilities upon constables. There are those who consider the office of constable outdated and no longer really necessary."

"In addition, there presently is very little restraint or control over constables who wish to carry out the wide range of powers allowed them by law."

"In light of the disparity between the powers of the office of constable and the present day use of those powers, it is a good idea to review the authority that goes with that office and decide if there should be some revisions in the current law."

Presently pending in the Legislature, Mahalak noted, is a bill which would allow townships to limit the powers of constables or else abolish the office entirely.

"There are many instances in which constables are elected and serve in name only," he said. "Although there may be no need for the office, the township boards presently have no authority to abolish the office or restrict it."

The bill was passed by the House and is under consideration in the Senate.

Mahalak was appointed to the special committee by House Speaker Bobby D. Crim (D-Davison). Other committee members are Reps. Thomas H. Brown (D-Westland), Mark Clodfelter (D-Flint), Wayne B. Sackett (R-Portage), and Donald Vansingle (R-Grant).

Citizen Band radio is a complicated but interesting field. The CB transmitter uses the same ultra-high frequency that is so vital to other kinds of radio transmission, including that of television. It turns out that this UHF is strictly line-of-sight transmission because of its high-frequency characteristics. This means that effective transmission radius is generally limited to about 5 to 10 miles.

Circulation Manager

As we see it

Where are those carriers of old

WHERE are the newspaper carrier boys of old?

We can recall in our distant youth when it was a distinction to have the responsibility of delivering the daily newspaper to local subscribers. In order to land a job as a paper boy you had to sign up on a long list of applicants at the business office of the newspaper. Then you waited, hoping some older kid would graduate, move out of town or break a leg...any one of which would move you a notch up on the list.

Alas, it's not like that today.

Distribution of the paper to local subscribers is one of the most difficult aspects of the newspaper publishing business today. There just aren't enough young people, or elderly persons for that matter, who are willing to accept the responsibility of delivering the newspaper to customer homes.

MAYBE it's another sign of our times. Money doesn't mean as much as it used to. Leisure time is more attractive than the demands of a daily job. Parents would rather give their children a healthy allowance and avoid the hassle of supervising a small business endeavor.

Baseball, hotdogs and apple pie are the symbols of America. Who cares about earning a living, assuming a role in private enterprise, serving the public, learning the economic facts of life, building a savings account for future needs?

The circulation manager's job in the newspaper has never been an easy one, but it has never been as tough as it is now. It's almost impossible to get youngsters to deliver papers, and it is extremely difficult to keep them on the job for any length of time.

THERE is good money to be made carrying papers. The Associated Newspapers has had some young employees who have earned enough to finance their early years in college and others have accumulated "nest eggs" of considerable size.

The job provides excellent training for entry in the business world and is an education in itself in dealing with the public. A carrier's job has given countless young people a sound start in the complex field of finances. It has been a solid first step in the growth from youth to adult.

But where are these young business people today?

Estate tax laws unfair to farmers

THE FARMER is a pretty tough individual.

He has the fortitude to "hang in there" after a crop failure and the courage to gamble on the weather, consumer demand, production costs and market prices.

As long as they're on earth, farmers will continue to overcome odds and obstacles to provide food and fibre for themselves and those of us involved in other pursuits.

It's after he leaves this earth that the farmer is concerned about—not where he will be going to collect his reward—but what will happen to the family farm into which he, his father and perhaps his grandfather before him, poured a lifetime of effort, hopes and dreams.

It isn't that his son isn't interested in taking up the reins; like many young farmers, he has chosen, rather than just inherited, agriculture as his career. The problem lies in whether the son will be able to pay his father's "death duty" without having to sell all or at least part of the farm. Sadly, outdated estate tax laws are causing this heartbreak to many farm families.

INFLATED LAND value is part of the problem. For example, farms purchased 50 years ago for $15 to $30 an acre may now be valued at $350 to $3,000 per acre. Inheritance taxes can range up to 70 percent, depending on the estate's value and the heirs must pay those within nine months, unless an exception is granted by the Internal Revenue Service.

Supposing a farmer dies and leaves his wife a $500,000 adjusted gross estate. The wife is eligible for a marital deduction of 50 percent and a standard deduction of $60,000. For taxable purposes, the estate is now valued at $190,000. The federal estate tax would be $47,700.

Several years later, the wife dies leaving the farm to her only son. The farm is still valued at $500,000 (perhaps more because of inflation), but this time there is no marital deduction to be claimed—only the $60,000 standard deduction. So the taxable value is now $440,000 and the inheritance tax would be $125,800. Aside from a miracle, the son sees no way to come up with $125,800...and so he sells the farm.

Farmers are working now to get legislation passed which would alleviate this kind of situation. Hopefully, their congressmen will agree that action must be taken to end the "sell-the-farm-to-pay-the-taxes" tragedies.

On the brighter side

Columnist nearly falls for 'get-rich' schemes

By JIM BRADLEY
Pastor, Fair Haven Baptist Church

I DON'T HAVE ANY column this week.

I know that breaks your heart but I struck it rich while on vacation in Missouri last week. And I didn't have time to write an article.

The family and I felt we just had to get away for a week's relaxation after all the suspense and excitement of the Democratic convention. We headed for a small town in southern Missouri when we discovered we didn't have time to make it to the Adult Sunday School class in Plains, Ga.

I won't say how small the Missouri town is where we went, but they painted "You are now entering and leaving Norwood" on the same sign.

When my wife and her sister went to visit relatives on her side of the family, I felt it was a perfect time to write my column. "Jim, be sure and have your column done by the time we get back," my wife ordered.

After everyone was gone, I prepared to write another masterpiece. I got out my pen and notebook. They don't have typewriters in Missouri. (At least Mark Twain never used one!)

Then it happened.

While I was waiting for inspiration to strike in the form of a column idea, I noticed two magazines on the floor. What happened next explains why I don't have a column this week.

The first advertisement to catch my eye was entitled: "How to Get Rich Doing Nothing." Now that's an intriguing title—especially since I was halfway there. (I was already doing nothing). Might as well get rich doing it, I thought.

The ad asked how I'd like to make $9,000 for one day's work; $35,000 for a week's promotion or $750 for an hour's time. Before I had time to repair my patched blue jeans, they answered their own question. I could become a promoter, they said, whether I was 21 or 71 years old. Since I was neither, I felt left out and turned the page.

I'm glad I did. Because there was an even better opportunity staring me in the face. "I CAN MAKE YOU APPEAR TO BE A MILLIONAIRE (in just four weeks!)" the headline promised. That's nothing, my credit cards already do that, I mused.

The man promised in the letter to make me appear to be a millionaire. He assured me I'd take a luxury cruise around the world, have a color TV in every room, expensive cars, luxurious homes and beautiful clothes. He said I'd even attract glamorous women.

"It'll be your choice every day—blonde...brunette...redhead. They'll hang on you like flies." (And me without a flyswatter!)

In my poverty-stricken condition I was just about ready to let this man give me the appearance of a millionaire. For only 10 dollars, yet! However, I glanced at a third advertising letter that just about broke my heart.

"My Friend," the ad pathetically began, "I'm getting old, and I don't have much longer to live. Unless I do this now, when I go the secret goes with me." (I didn't know whether to finish the letter or to call the rescue squad.)

He told of his life-long quest for knowledge and of reading all the books of ancient lore. He delved into the oldest recorded writings of ancient civilizations and almost insanely (his word) put all the pieces of the puzzle of life together. No part of the earth missed his searching gaze. (He probably even rode the Corkscrew at Cedar Point).

For only 10 dollars he would share all the "secrets of the ages" with me. Almost as if he had read my mind, he added a P.S. to his letter. "I hope you don't think that I'm only interested in your 10 dollars. I would like to give the book to everyone free (sure you would!) but I have found that people appreciate things more when they have to pay for them."

How could I deny this dying man's request? I leaned back and tried to decide. Shall I be a promoter and make $9,000 a day? How about letting this other guy give me the appearance of a millionaire? And what about this dying man who offered me the "secret of the ages?"

Each of the offers cost 10 dollars but they would make me a millionaire many times over. I reveled in my thoughts and dreamed of what I would do with all the money I'd have in just a few weeks.

Just then my wife came through the front door. "Have you written your column yet?" she demanded.

"No, I haven't even started yet—but..."

"You lazy bum! You aren't worth two cents...!!!"

"You're right," I agreed, "but I will be if I can get to the hospital before this dying man passes away and takes his secret with him."

Could touch off major debate

B-1 bomber production hits snag in Congress

By TOM OCHILTREE
Panax Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Plans of the Ford Administration to put the expensive B-1 bomber into production hit a snag in Congress and could touch off a major defense debate during the coming presidential election campaign.

According to Thomas C. Reed, secretary of the Air Force, any delay in adding the B-1 to the nation's arsenal would diminish America's nuclear deterrent and in the long run would add to the cost of putting the manned bomber in the hands of the Strategic Air Command (SAC).

Despite this, Administration position, Congress could decide to postpone B-1 production until the newly elected president has had time to review the $21.6 billion program. That amount of money would buy 244 B-1s.

President Ford strongly supports the upgrading of the manned bomber portion of America's nuclear deterrent. Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter, however, has challenged the economic wisdom of the B-1 program and would like time to review all the arguments for and against.

The depth of the disagreement on the B-1 became apparent the other day when the Senate Appropriations Committee, by a 15 to 14 vote, recommended that the bomber not go into production now.

If this committee action is accepted by Congress, the $1 billion earmarked as a first step to put three B-1s into production could not be touched until Feb. 1, 1977.

The Senate is expected to take up the committee recommendation in a few days. If the Senate accepts the delay, the matter would have to go to conference with the House which has passed a different appropriations bill. The House measure would allow President Ford to begin B-1 production immediately.

Addressing a luncheon meeting of the American Security Council shortly before the committee moved to allow the program, Reed said if the Pentagon got the first installment of $1 billion it would begin placing those funds on contract in November.

Three test planes already have been built and "have had more development and pre-production analyses and tests than any previous aircraft, military or civilian," Reed said.

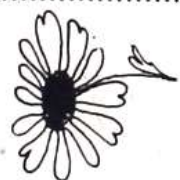

"There are no technical reasons for delaying the program," he added. "By any measure of merit, it is time to proceed. Even if we commit production funds this fall, the first operational B-1 will not show up at a SAC base until 1980. It will take almost a decade until we have a full B-1 force in operation."

Reed insisted that "it would be the height of folly to stand down now—or to vote a three or four-month funding moratorium that would lay off thousands of trained workers and would add half a billion dollars to the cost of the program for no purpose."

The American nuclear deterrent force is based on three distinct weapons systems—the land based intercontinental ballistic missiles, submarine-launched ballistic missiles and manned bombers.

The purpose of such a diversity of weapons, Reed said, is to pose "an insoluble targeting problem to any potential aggressor."

The B-1 is designed to keep the manned bomber leg of the three-legged system up to a high level of efficiency. The United States, he said, needs a manned bomber that can penetrate the expected 1985 defenses around Soviet high value targets. In the opinion of Pentagon experts, the B-1 is the aircraft capable of doing that job.

RESURRECTION OF LAZARUS

A great many number of years ago when dear Jesus was down on earth below, near Jerusalem, in the town of Bethany lived Lazarus and his sisters, Martha and Mary.

One day Lazarus became very sick and his sisters then sent to Jesus quick, saying Lord, "your dear friend is very ill." They knew he could heal if it was his will.

Jesus didn't go right away at their request because he knew what for their faith was best. But in two days Jesus said, "I shall go to wake up Lazarus who is asleep, I know."

His disciples said, "he's sleeping and doing fine. He will get better for isn't that a good sign?" Jesus then turned to them and said quite plain, "Lazarus is dead, but he has not died in vain."

"So that you would have faith I am glad I stayed here."

We will now go then everything will become clear." Martha went to meet Jesus when he came and said, "Lord, if you had been here my brother would not be dead."

"But even now whatever request you may make I know God will grant it to you for your sake." Jesus said, "your brother will arise again." Martha said, "he will on the last day," and then

She went back to the house where she had come from told her sister secretly, "the Lord has now come and he is waiting and asking for you now." Mary went to meet him with sorrow on her brow.

When her friends saw Mary leave fast and go out, they followed because they didn't know what it was about. For they saw her looking so sad and forlorn. They thought she was going to Lazarus' grave to mourn.

When Mary saw Jesus she kneeled at his feet and cried, "Lord, if you'd been here my brother would not have died." And so while Lazarus in death, was sleeping his two sisters and friends were sadly weeping.

Jesus loved them and felt sorry for them, 'tis true, that he began to sadly weep with them, too. He said, "where have you laid him? Let's go to his grave." And they went to a place wherein there was a grave.

Then Jesus said slowly, "take away the stone and the glory of God shall be to you shone."

"He has been dead for four days," Martha began to say. Jesus said, "I told you a while ago today

If you had faith the glory of God would be revealed." They took away the stone where his body was concealed, and Jesus then slowly raised up his eyes, with his face so gently, toward the skies.

And then Jesus said clearly, word by word, "Father, I now thank you that you have heard. Father, I know that you always do hear. I say & for the sake of those that are near."

So with their ears they hear and their own eyes see and believe, Father, you have sent me." Then Jesus said in a loud voice in one breath, "Lazarus, come forth," and he awakened him from death.

For new life was now in his body once more. He was well and strong as he had been before. And Lazarus came out bound in his grave clothes with a napkin tied over his mouth and nose.

Jesus told them to untie him, his grave clothes bound him tight. Many believed when they saw the miraculous sight. Oh, how happy Martha and Mary must have been to have their dear brother with them once again.

Argument for death penalty is justice

WASHINGTON — Recently, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the Florida death penalty. Rocco James Surace, 21, and William Thompson, 24, will probably die in the electric chair.

The pair was sentenced in the torture murder of a 23-year-old

Georgia girl, Sally Ivester, whom they burned with cigarettes, beat with a chain belt, slugged with a chair leg, and sexually mutilated.

Though they will have longer to contemplate its coming, their death will surely be less "cruel and unusual" than that inflicted upon their victim.

The Court has apparently been reading the election returns, or at least glancing at the Gallup and Harris polls, which show a clear majority favoring reinstatement of the death penalty in capital crimes. This popular sentiment represents a triumph of common sense over propaganda, of native wisdom over conventional ideology.

Despite the modern cant about the death penalty being "barbaric," this comports precisely with the sense of justice of the common man who believes that punishment should be made to fit the crime. Talk about the death penalty being "arbitrary and discriminatory" likewise fails to impress. If capital punishment is seemingly imposed disproportionately upon the young, the poor, and the black, it is because most armed robberies and murders are not the work of the well-educated, the well-bred, or the well-born.

When Surace and Thompson die in the electric chair, will that deter other sadists — of the Richard Speck, Charles Manson strain?

Perhaps. Perhaps not.

But the burden of proof rests with those who would outlaw the death penalty, in that the decade during which it has fallen into disuse has been among the most lawless in the history of civilized nations.

But deterrence is neither the only nor the most persuasive argument for the death penalty. Sadists like Surace and Thompson, criminal incorrigibles like Mafia "hit men" may not be deterred by any threat. Nor will political fanatics or terrorists, some of whom might glory in public execution for the "cause." The principal argument for the death penalty is justice. It is the only punishment fitting for the most abhorrent of crimes.

A society which will never impose the death penalty is making a statement that there is nothing within its culture so sacred that it will be defended at the price of life. But when the state of Florida executes Surace and Thompson it will testify publicly to the gravity with which it views their crime, and to the value its places upon the life of its lost member, Sally Ivester.

Reinstitution of the death penalty, then, appears less the mark of a society sinking into barbarism than the symptom of a society regaining its health, a society no longer absorbed in self-analysis or paralyzed by self-doubt. Such a society will surely command greater respect from its enemies, within and without, than the one which has in the past decade tolerated with relative impunity the annual slaughter of 20,000 of its own.

Reagan nominated in New York City?

By JEFFREY ST. JOHN
Copley News Service

NEW YORK — "Our polls show," asserted Jimmy Carter's political pollster Patrick Caddell, "that the pardon of Richard Nixon by President Ford has done tremendous political damage to Ford."

Forty-five minutes after this statement, Carter's running mate, Sen. Walter Mondale (D-Minn.) made a slashing reference to the Ford pardon in his acceptance speech. It brought the packed convention hall at New York's Madison Square Garden to its feet with a thunderous roar of approval.

Political historians may look back on that Mondale statement, which Carter clearly avoided in his own acceptance speech, as the key factor that allowed Ronald Reagan to wrest the nomination from President Ford. Reagan has avoided the pardon issue and the Democrats at their July convention had hardly mentioned it. In fact, their strategy had been to play down the Watergate-pardon issue at the convention and, once Ford had the nomination, to make it then the major issue in the campaign. But Mondale's speech blew the entire strategy sky high with his slashing reference to the Nixon pardon.

Throughout the Democratic Convention one prominent Democrat after another conceded that Ronald Reagan would prove to be a tougher opponent than Ford. For example, Sen. Alan Cranston (D-Calif.) said in an interview here that "We cannot carry California for the Carter-Mondale ticket if Reagan is the nominee. He will carry California and take a sizable bloc of electoral votes." Patrick Caddell said that a campaign against Ford would be easier for the Carter forces. But a Reagan-Carter race would be tougher.

"Reagan is a much better candidate," he said, "and he has some of our anti-Washington issues and would be harder to beat."

Carter himself conceded after his acceptance speech in an interview with the TV networks that "Reagan is a much better campaigner, a much better actor. Mr. Ford is a nice, well-meaning man." Apparently this statement sought to take the edge off the strategic blunder of Mondale raising the pardon issue prior to the Republican convention.

Only Carter's top campaign aide, Hamilton Jordan, stuck to the agreed-upon script that the Watergate-pardon issue would be muted so as not to give Reagan an advantage in Kansas City next month.

"Governor Reagan is a superb campaigner," he said, "but either GOP candidate would be tough to beat in November."

It remains to be seen whether Mondale will prove to be a serious problem for the Carter forces in the coming campaign. There is no question that the Minnesota Democrat gave Reagan's nomination a powerful assist with his attack on the Ford pardon of Nixon. Behind the scenes in Kansas City next month, Reagan's delegate hunters can cite the polls taken by Carter's people and the convention's response to Mondale's attack and argue that nomination of Gerald Ford will bury the Republicans in November, as the pardon-Watergate issue did during the Congressional campaigns of 1974. The uncommitted GOP delegates and those who are soft for Ford will be hard pressed to ignore this argument.

Mondale's attack on the Nixon pardon by Ford raises the question whether Carter will, as he did elsewhere and with others during the convention, be forced to place tighter controls on what Mondale does and says during the campaign. Such restrictions could create serious problems and even friction between the Carter and Mondale camps. Mondale is a strong liberal who was pushed by the liberal and labor elements of the party, both which still regard Carter with some misgivings and suspicion. Mondale and his supporters are much more ideological. Whereas the Carter people, despite Mondale's contention in his acceptance speech that Carter would run on principle, are pragmatic technicians not above subordinating principle to practical political considerations.

Clearly Ronald Reagan, the former Democrat, may have Walter Mondale to thank should he do what no other political leader has done: wrest the nomination from an incumbent President. This potential development doubtlessly could make the 1976 presidential campaign the most interesting and intense in decades.

Olympic reform needed

By TOM OCHILTREE
Panax Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Rep. James F. O'Hara (D-Mich.), wants Congress to lead a drive to remove the acid nationalistic overtones from the Olympics and focus attention instead on individual athletes.

He introduced a resolution last week calling for the appointment of a joint House-Senate select committee to study ugly incidents at recent games, including the current ones in Montreal, and propose reforms. This congressional panel would work with American members of the International Olympics Committee.

In a speech on the House floor O'Hara insisted it was perfectly proper for the United States to take the lead in reforming the games since the Olympics depend heavily on the massive financial support provided by U. S. television.

O'Hara made his move as disputes continued to swirl around the Montreal Olympics. Some 26 countries have withdrawn from the games in the Canadian city for various reasons. Most of them pulled out to denote displeasure at New Zealand for playing the Republic of South Africa in rugby football, which is not even an Olympic sport.

Canada, the host government, helped poison the atmosphere by refusing to allow Chinese Nationalists to compete under the name and flag of their country but insisted instead that they be identified as Taiwanese.

O'Hara said the committee he proposed should seek ways of "removing the nationalist trappings and ending the international rivalries" which have marred recent games.

Insisting that the whole concept of the Olympics needs to be revived he said the true spirit of the Olympics comes from the athletes themselves. "We don't have to have the national anthem played for the winner of each competition."

"We don't have to have athletes appearing under their nation's flag. We don't have to put together national teams for particular sports. What we do need is international competition among individual athletes."

If the games were reformed so the athletes were treated as something other than pawns, future games could avoid the nationalistic animosities of the past and the violence that marred the Munich Olympics, the Michigan congressman said.

"This world has some outstanding athletes," he said. "They should compete for the good of a sport not the good of any particular country or political philosophy."

Intermediate district moves into new home

The Wayne County Intermediate School has hung its "Home, Sweet Home" sign in its first permanent quarters at Van Buren and Howe roads in Wayne.

The new building, which cost $5.3 million to construct, has approximately 95,000 square feet of space for 180 of the district's 1,100 employees.

"After scores of years without separate facilities for the Intermediate School District, we are very pleased not only to have our own building, but to have it when it can be of greater importance to all the schools of Wayne County," said Dr. William Zimmons, superintendent of the intermediate school system. "With the present financial pressure on local school districts, it is essential that we be ready to provide more and better services to our schools."

"In this new building our staff can be more efficient, more productive and respond more quickly to any requests for assistance."

The new building has space available for use by teachers and administrators in the 36 school districts within the intermediate school system.

There is an auditorium, seating 200, and several smaller conference rooms, as well as work areas for teachers who wish to use the facilities provided by the intermediate district.

The new building contains a resource center which can provide all types of educational aids whether printed, on film, or on tape. Local school districts pay only for the cost of materials.

The Data Processing Center of the intermediate district has been housed in the new building since January. It is used by 25 of the 36 local school districts for payroll, attendance, student scheduling, inventory, test scoring and computer assisted instruction.

Local districts can gain access to the computers through terminals located in their own buildings and pay only for the computer time used. Computers are available 16 hours a day, six days a week.

There also is an extensive reference service which will research and reproduce information on any phase of education.

A staff of 60 consultants, with expertise in all fields of public education, is available to local districts either as individuals or as a management team. No charge is made for the service.

The move to new quarters will save the intermediate district more than $132,000 in rents it now is paying for office space in downtown

Detroit, Westwood, Wayne and Lincoln Park. The new center was financed by a bond issue being retired by a county tax levy of .06 mills.

The new building is on a 30-acre site adjoining the property of the Wayne County Federated Library System. A portion of the site was purchased from Wayne County in 1971. An additional section containing five homes was purchased later. The total costs for the site, including clearing and development, was $225,000.

Intermediate school districts are an outgrowth of the old county school districts, which began with public education in Michigan. There now are 58 intermediate districts. They were established by the new state constitution in 1963 and are supported by state funds and by a small county operating tax totalling .03 mills in Wayne County.

State law requires the intermediate district to audit public school membership, oversee transportation and food services and coordinate all special education in the county.

As a part of its responsibility for special education, the Wayne County Intermediate District operates programs for approximately 4,000 handicapped students in 18 special education centers throughout the county. These are students who cannot be accommodated by local school districts.

Ford's friends set for annual picnic

Friends of Congressman William D. Ford will gather this Saturday to help the 15th District representative celebrate his birthday.

The 12th annual country-style picnic, as in past years, will be held at New Liberty Park in Huron Township, and according to picnic chairman Harry Brunner, a crowd of between 6,000 and 8,000 people is expected to assemble at the park.

For an entry fee of $7 per car, picnickers will dine on corn, Polish sausage, hot dogs, popcorn, beer for the adults and softdrinks for the youngsters. Games, contests, music and dancing will be part of the entertainment.

To lend a touch of nostalgia, an old-fashioned steam engine will make a return appearance to provide steam for cooking the corn.

"We put on an old-fashioned, country-style picnic, and we encourage people to bring their entire family," Brunner added. "This is the kind of picnic our grandparents used to enjoy, and there's no reason why we can't do it today."

According to Brunner, the $7-per car charge has caused problems in past years when at times more than 12 people were packed into on vehicle. To avoid such problems, a charge of $1 per adult will be levied against cars with more than seven occupants.

The picnic, held three days before the August primary election not only attracts picnickers, but also politicians "delighted at the opportunity to mix with thousands of voters."

"We are proud of our annual picnic, even as we are very proud of Congressman Bill Ford," Brunner said. "We think he is the best Congressman in Washington, and we want him to know that we think so. This birthday picnic is one way of letting him know."

New Liberty Park is located between Middle Belt and Inkster roads, on Bradow Road. Bradow is between Sibley and King roads. The picnic will start at 12 p.m.

'71 grads may hold reunion

Students from the Belleville High School Class of 1971 are gathering information from fellow graduates about their interest in holding a class reunion.

Those interested in discussing a reunion or attending one should contact Mrs. Mida at 699-7766, Mrs. Gilliam at 699-5255 or Mrs. Burger at 721-1467.

First roundtrip

The first automobile to travel coast-to-coast under its own power arrived in Newark, N.J. from San Francisco on Aug. 31, 1903. The 3,500-mile trip was made in 61 days by a 1-cylinder 1903 Packard, named "Old Pacific." At the wheel was Tom Fetch, Packard's plant foreman, who made the journey to prove that the automobile was more than a rich man's plaything; it really could be driven great distances. That very car — the "Old Pacific" — now is among the 200 historic, antique and classic automobiles on display in Henry Ford Museum.

Maps find fish

This year, more than one million licensed fishermen from the Detroit metropolitan area will pick up their rods and reels and head for their favorite lake or stream.

Unlike their hunter cousins, however, they won't necessarily be northbound. In fact, most fishermen of the area find their favorite sport quite rewarding within a few miles of the city.

It's for this reason that the Michigan Department of Natural Resources and the Metropolitan Ford Dealers have combined efforts to produce a fishing map, featuring the lakes and streams of southeastern Michigan.

Ed Schmid, chairman of the Metro Detroit Ford Dealer Association, said the map will be available free at any Ford dealership in the counties of Oakland, Washtenaw, St. Clair, Macomb, Wayne and Monroe.

The map has been researched and designed to deal specifically with the established fishing areas of southeastern Michigan, with special emphasis on the fishing opportunities for those living in the Detroit metropolitan area. It shows the location of more than 140 lakes and streams; indicates the fish species to be caught in these waters and the general facilities available to fishermen.

"We feel the map accomplishes two things," Schmid said. "It will aid you in your search for a lake or stream where fish are known to be plentiful and it will help you catch them when you get there."

Canoeists turn back time

Rivers contain memories of logging days

The 1800s Paul Bunyan days, when braggish campstove yarns and the plaintive song of the crosscut saw filled the forest air are gone, but their memories remain in the valleys of Michigan's Au Sable, Rifle and Thunder Bay rivers.

Magician headlines rec show

The Romulus Recreation Department will present an added treat to its summer program on Aug. 6 when Blackgold the Magician will present a magic comedy show.

The show will be part of the regular movie program at the Romulus Senior High School Auditorium.

The magic comedy show will begin promptly at 1 p.m. that day and will be followed by the film "Green Slime." Admission to both shows is free.

Youngsters are being reminded by Recreation Department members that no refreshments are permitted in the auditorium and that preschoolers cannot ride buses, to the program.

For further information, contact the Recreation Department at 941-0666, ext. 67.

cream of Michigan's white pine forests, the rivers now carry thousands of canoeists each summer weekend past visible reminders of the lumbering era and through pine and oak forests which again cover the north.

The Au Sable, synonymous with canoeing, is the longest of the three rivers. Its navigable, rapid-free branches meander 240 miles before emptying into Lake Huron at Oscoda, site of the annual Paul Bunyan Festival in mid-August.

The Au Sable was once a highway floating enough logs which when milled provided enough lumber to reach the moon if placed end to end.

Today it is the state's most canoe waterway.

Most paddlers begin on the river's main stream in Grayling, named for the fish once native to the river and headquarters for at least eight liveries offering trips from two hours to seven days. Another livery is located upstream near Frederic.

The most popular trip is a 4-hour float from Grayling to Stephan Bridge. The river flows gently on this route, taking canoeists past small brown and brook trout darting through the clear water.

This stretch is heavily canoed and paddlers might want to put in at Wakeley Bridge further east, canoeing to McMaster's Bridge. It's a smooth, 3-hour float past stumps of once-giant pines partially hidden by second-growth forests.

Further downstream, canoeists can rent craft at Luzerne, McKinley, Glennie, Oscoda and also at Mio, a former lumberjack supply center and now site of the annual Forestry Exposition each July. Paddlers also can see Mio's Bicentennial amphitheater project being built on Mio Dam pond.

Those tackling the entire river should plan on at least a week's travel from Grayling to Oscoda with portages at six dams. Camping is available at numerous private and publicly-owned parks, including one on an island in Cooke Dam Pond near Oscoda. Designated Consumers Power Co. land also is available for campers.

The entire route, which takes canoeists past the famous Lumbermen's Monument near Oscoda, is traced each summer during the Au Sable River Canoe Race, part of Grayling's July Milltown Festival.

Most trips down the river's famous South Branch start in Roscommon. Daylong floats from liveries there through the spectacular Mason Wilderness Tract are especially beautiful in fall or winter.

The Rifle, formed by several small creeks converging near Rose City, is good for young paddlers. It is dam-free with few rapids and a depth of 14 to 18 inches.

It also was used for logging in the 1800s, but not as extensively as the Au Sable. After the timber played out, land was sold for farming, but most of the riverbank is again shaded by foliage.

Canoeing the 103 miles from White Ash Bridge near Rose City to Omer takes three days. Only one state campground is available and few liveries offer riverbank campsites. Most paddlers spend overnight on state land or ask private landowners for permission to camp.

Rifle River trips from one to three hours are most popular, with routes from Selkirk Road to M-55 and from White Ash Bridge to M-55 lasting 75 minutes and four hours, respectively. The current is moderate with no rapids, but in late summer watch for boulders. There are liveries at Rose City and near West Branch, Sterling and Omer.

Two years before Michigan was a state, pioneers first saw the Thunder Bay River's stands of white pine. In 1859, the first of 20 sawmills along its banks was built at Alpena, and for 40 years, timber fed the city, now home of the world's largest portland cement plant.

Once at Alpena, larger logs were chained to form immense rafts for trips to mills as far away as New York. Each raft had enough wood to build an 8-foot-wide boardwalk from Oscoda to Detroit.

Canoeists start from liveries in Atlanta and at the M-33 Bridge, or at the river's headwaters at Lake Fifteen. There, the river is hallow and moderately fast, with fair numbers of trout.

Dams at Atlanta and Hillman slow its course, but near Long Rapids, the river races through two rapids separated by about five miles of smooth water. Novices might want to inspect these rapids before shooting through.

Canoeists must portage at Seven and Four Mile dams before drifting into Alpena. Those taking the trip in late July or early August can take in Alpena's annual art or brown trout festivals.

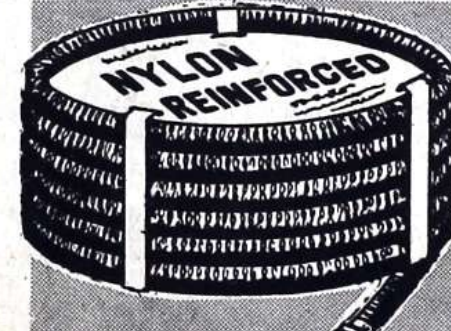

River travelers also can see work now being done on that city's Bicentennial bicycle path and sculpture along the riverbank.

Brownie day camp fun time for group

Brownie Girl Scouts from Haggerty School in Belleville and Mt. Pleasant School in Romulus recently enjoyed four days of scouting fun. Some 50 girls and 10 adults practiced the "Brownie B's" — Be a Discoverer, Be a Friend-maker and Be a Ready Helper.

Activities began each morning as the group gathered at the home of Mrs. Gerry Grieve on Hannan Road for a flag ceremony led by a different 3-girl color guard each day.

Using their Brownie ring form of government, the girls discussed the program for the day and drew names from the "it" bag to determine the specific responsibilities for the day. In addition to the color guard, girls were chosen for clean up detail, first aid duties, fire building and cooking. Grace was led on a voluntary basis.

The girls took part in hikes, games, songs, races and projects such as yarn art, rock collecting and painting, tin can designs and button pictures. On one warm afternoon after a hike and races, they were treated to ice cream sundaes made to their own specifications.

The final activity was a treasure hunt (the trail having been marked by the Junior Girl Scouts) which lead to two watermelons which disappeared soon after their discovery.

Four Junior Scouts from Haggerty worked toward their Sign of the Star and Sign of the Arrow requirements. Karen Simmons and Glenna Gillingham of Troop No. 734 and Lisa Gonczy and Debbie Forsyth of Troop No. 668 did a fine job of working with the Brownies and the adults in charge.

Working as a team and sharing the enthusiasm and fun of the day camp were Mrs. Grieve, TSD: Mrs. Peggy Summer, Mrs. Belinda Garland, Mrs. Dulce Jacobson, Mrs. Barbara Thomas, Mrs. Diane Gonczy and Mrs. Linda Widener of Troop No. 744; Mrs. Linda Watson of Troop No. 736; Mrs. Connie Morris of Troop No. 732, and Mrs. Joan Omarzu. Mrs. Gail Blanchard and Mrs. Carol Hein of Troop No. 742.

M. Touses visit Gordons and relatives in Columbus

Mr. and Mrs. Merle Touse recently returned to Belleville after a weekend with a former Belleville couple, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Gordon, who have taken a summer home in the Smoky Mountains near Hendersonville, N.C.

While there they enjoyed viewing the beautiful mountain scenery and miles of apple orchards; the new Clifton Cafeteria, the Skyline and the Hendersonville Methodist Church. They also made new friends with Mr. and Mrs. Paul Shanor who are summering near the Gordons.

On Saturday morning they attended a mountain farmers' market where a great variety of home baked and canned goods, crafts of all kinds, vegetables and fresh-cut, potted or dried flowers could be purchased.

Enroute home they stopped for lunch at the famous Boone Tavern at Berea College in Ohio and then visited their nephew and family, Prof. and Mrs. Robert Touse and their three children in Columbus, Ohio. While there they toured the new Methodist Hospital where the younger Mrs. Touse works as a laboratory technician and Ohio State University where Professor Touse teaches forestry.

Productivity curbs prices

In 1950, there were more than twice as many farmers and ranchers than there are today. But farm production in terms of bushels per acre and livestock per man-hour of labor is running at more than twice the level of 1950. The dramatic increase in productivity by farmers and ranchers has helped curb increases in food prices.

A willingness to use new and better techniques for production, investments in large, more efficient equipment and continual improvement in the quality of livestock and crops are the major reasons for the surge in agricultural productivity.

Branam, VanDeCar exchange vows, rings

Some 300 relatives and friends congratulated the newly wed John Edward Branams at the reception in UAW Local No. 735 Hall of Belleville which followed their June 19 wedding at the First United Methodist Church of Belleville.

Diane Caroline Van De Car became Mrs. Branam during a double ring ceremony conducted by The Rev. Joy E. Arthur. For the occasion the altar was appointed with two vases of yellow and white gladiolas and mums.

Paul Thompson, the bridegroom's uncle, was soloist with organ music played by Mrs. Gwen Ashe.

The late afternoon wedding united the daughter of Mrs. William Van De Car of 10040 Clayton Rd., Belleville, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Phil Branam of 11524 Fisher, Belleville.

William Van De Car Jr. escorted his sister to her waiting bridegroom.

For her special day, the bride selected a toe-touching gown of white peau de soie patterned in the Victorian mode with clear bishop sleeves and a high neckline of ruffled venice daisy lace. The lace, used to form a V effect on the sheer empire bodice, was repeated on the sleeves and on the deep flounce which accented the hemline and circular chapel train.

A little cap, delicately beaded to enhance the lace, secured the bride's 2-tiered illusion veil which was outlined with lace and which drifted to fingertip length. Completing her bridal finery was a cascade bouquet of white roses, daisies and baby's breath.

The honor attendant, Mrs. Kathy Krajewski of Belleville, was distinguished by the royal blue wide brim hat which contrasted with her pale blue gown.

The bridesmaids, Mrs. Phillis Van De Car of Inkster and Mrs. Linda Van De Car of Belleville, both sisters-in-law of the bride, donned white hats and identical pale blue dresses and carried colonial arrangements of yellow daisies, white carnations and baby's breath tied with royal blue ribbon.

Six-year old Betsy Van De Car, the daughter of the William Van De Cars, wore a little pale blue frock topped with a sheer white pinafore apron for her role as flowergirl.

The bridegroom chose his brother, Larry D. Branam, to be best man. Groomsmen were Phil Goldsmith of Temperance; Gary Krajewski of Belleville; Alan Van De Car of Belleville, the bride's brother, and Jarold Goodrich of Marshall. Eight-year old Billy Van Car served as junior usher.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs.

Van De Car donned a pink gown with long chiffon sleeves. A corsage of pink sweetheart roses and baby's breath was pinned at the shoulder. Mrs. Branam, the bridegroom's mother, appeared in a long blue gown with a chiffon cape. Her corsage was comprised of white carnations, yellow sweetheart roses and baby's breath.

The newlyweds are making their home at 1628-J Spartan Village in East Lansing where the bridegroom is in his final year at Michigan State University's School of Veterinary Medicine. A member of Delta Tau Delta fraternity, he graduated from MSU in 1975.

The bride and her husband both graduated from Belleville High School in 1972. She attended Washtenaw Community College and currently is employed at Michigan State University.

The rehearsal dinner was held at the home of the bridegroom's parents on Fisher Road.

Play safe with ground beef

Even though ground beef is plentiful and economical, home-makers should exercise care in handling the meat as soon as it arrives from the market. Because ground meat is perishable, it should be stored immediately in the coldest part of the refrigerator or meat compartment and should be used within twenty-four hours after purchase.

County CETA programs net federal funding through 1977

Wayne County job programs under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) that were scheduled to expire this month have been extended through January 1976, according to Wayne County Board of Commissioners Chairman John Barr. Barr said almost $9 million in new and re-allocated federal funds enables all ongoing CETA programs to continue except temporary summer employment that ends Sept. 3.

Of the total amount now available through the period of extension, $7,661,542 was just received from the U.S. Department of Labor, and $1,142,896 are unused funds from last year that were re-allocated, Barr said.

"We are delighted with this $8,804,438 that will keep about 1,500 people working for another seven months," he added.

Barr emphasized that all 40 eligible communities in the county will share in the distribution of the funds, and noted that Dearborn Heights, Lincoln Park, Taylor, Westland, Redford Township, Highland Park and Inkster are expected to receive upwards of a $500,000 or more.

Garden City and Wyandotte tentatively will receive more than $300,000, Ecorse nearly $200,000, Romulus slightly more than $200,000, and River Rouge more than $125,000.

Other communities scheduled for estimated amounts are Belleville, $38,400; Inkster, $420,369; Wayne, $130,200; Westland, $514,096; Canton Township, $35,000; Sumpter Township, $84,100; Huron Township, $43,943; and Van Buren Township, $138,885.

Out of the grant, $2.1 million will be used partly for the administrative costs of the program and for the salaries of CETA workers in county departments and private non-profit organizations.

The county has about 300 CETA employees, while approximately 200 are working with the non-profit groups.

Jobs for Michigan?

Congressman William D. Ford (D-15th District) has been working with other Michigan legislators in Congress to have a proposed national Solar Energy Research Institute located in the state. Michigan has submitted six possible sites, including one in Romulus, for consideration by the Energy Research and Development Administration. Ford (center) reviewed the Michigan proposal with John Wogk (left), president of the Michigan Energy Resource Research Association, and Herbert Robbins, director of the Michigan legislator's Washington office. A decision on the location of the institute is expected by the end of the year. If located in Western Wayne County, the project would provide several thousand jobs.

Extension suggests 'no' for solicitation

A polite but firm "no" is the best answer if someone comes to the door, offering septic tank cleaning services.

Jim Boyd, Michigan State University Extension housing specialist, reports that door-to-door solicitation for septic tank pumping is occurring in some Michigan counties. Reputable, licensed cleaners do not solicit business in this way, and the Michigan Septic Tank Association has declared door-to-door solicitation an unethical practice, he added.

Before hiring a cleaner to pump a septic tank, residents should be sure he has a Department of Health number and check with the local health department to be sure the operator is legitimate.

Beware of a septic tank cleaner who charges by the pound removed, Boyd warned. Charging by the pound would involve a weight certificate with before and after weights determined by a state-certified scale. Check with the local health department to see how charges should be figured.

He nets service position

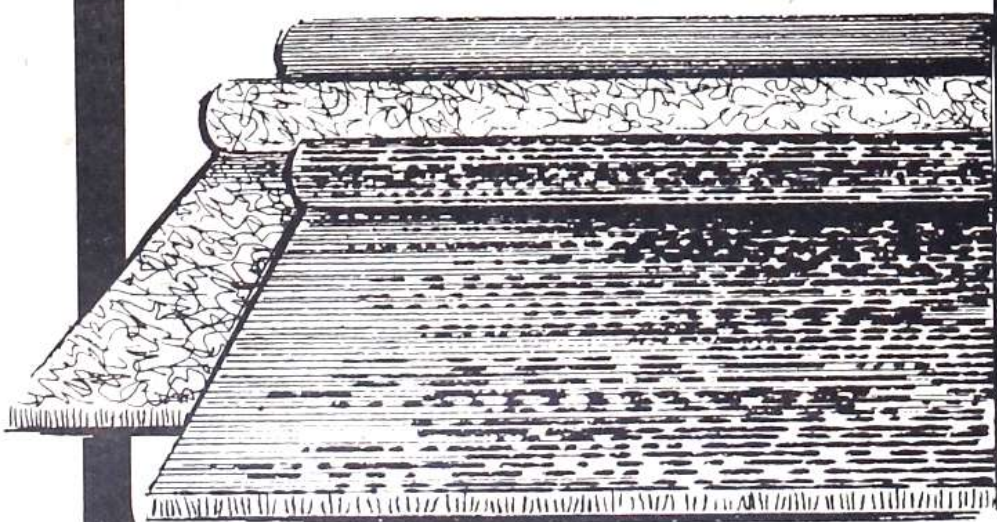

Dempsey B. Allen has been appointed Extension 4-H youth agent for Wayne County, effective Aug. 1, pending Michigan State University Board of Trustees' approval.

A 1974 sociology graduate from Saginaw Valley College, Allen has served for three years as the field representative in the Labor, Education and Advancement Program of Flint's Urban League.

His new duties include organizing and implementing youth development programs, recruiting, training, and assisting volunteer leaders and assisting and advising local support groups in security and managing funds to support the 4-H program.

Will cut police chauffeuring

Pilot program puts court in out-county

Western Wayne County communities will have more policemen available for street patrol this fall, because they won't be tied up in downtown Detroit courtrooms.

A pilot program, just getting started, will empower selected suburban district and municipal judges to handle all criminal pretrial work at the felony level in local courtrooms, according to 14 out-county commissioners who were instrumental in obtaining a $95,000 federal grant for the project.

The commissioners claim the new program will keep policemen in their own communities — and save thousands in tax dollars that normally would be spent on travel to and from downtown Detroit courtrooms.

When a crime is committed in Wayne County outside the Detroit city limits, the accused comes under the jurisdiction of Wayne County Circuit Court, located in downtown Detroit.

Although limited pretrial work now is done by district judges, the lion's share, including final arraignments and plea taking, is handled by one of 33 circuit judges.

"This requires considerable time, travel, expense and manpower by police officers, witnesses, victims, lawyers and others who must log the miles into Detroit for necessary court appearances," the commissioners said.

Wayne County Commissioner Royce E. Smith (D-26th District), a long-time advocate of equal out-county court services, said the program would mark the first time in the history of Circuit Court that services would be brought directly into the suburban communities.

"Suburban police officers involved in criminal cases now lose precious hours that could be devoted to police work because they're got to drive downtown and babysit a prisoner, often for an entire day, while he goes through the pretrial process," he said. "This new program will put policemen back on the streets faster and take them out of the babysitting and chauffeuring business."

Under the plan, four or five satellite courts will be set up in existing courthouses at various locations in outer Wayne County.

James N. Canham, Chief Judge of Circuit Court, will name four or five district or municipal judges to serve as acting circuit judges on a rotating basis.

"They will conduct felony criminal arraignments, pretrial plea bargaining and plea taking in the community where the crime occurred, or in a nearby community," he said.

Canham, who has been working with all county commissioners to streamline court operations, added that criminal trials would continue to be held in downtown circuit courtrooms.

"We're only moving the pretrial services out-county," he emphasized.

The new program will keep policemen in their own communities...

The chief judge has appointed David Kasunic, administrator of the successful 1-day, 1-trial program, to head the out-county project.

Kasunic said the $95,000 grant went into effect July 1 and covers a 15-month period. It will be matched by $5,000 from both the state and the county.

"The first three months is for gearing-up," he said. "We're using this time to get recommendations from local mayors, police chiefs and commissioners as to existing court space, dockets and the availability of judges. "But we expect to be in full swing by October."

Kasunic said five areas are being considered for the satellite court activities, the downriver corridor (probably Trenton), Western Wayne County (probably Livonia), mid-western Wayne County (perhaps both Westland and Dearborn), the core cities of Hamtramck and Highland Park and the Grosse Pointe-Harper Woods area.

He also added that Canham already has tapped three district judges for out-county circuit court service "who were ready to step in when called."

Named were District Judges James B. Stone of the 34th District Court, Romulus, Jerry McNally of the 33rd District Court, Trenton and James Mies of the 16th District Court, Livonia.

All have been serving on a study committee to improve out-county Circuit Court services, Canham said.

"This program has to be flexible," Canham added. "We'll be asking other judges to serve and intend to work closely with those communities who lend us their courtrooms so that we don't interfere with local court activities."

Also, because judges cannot wear two hats, he said they would have to serve outside their own district when performing Circuit Court duties.

Commissioner Thomas Presnell (D-20th District), said this will "help make the entire Circuit Court system more efficient — at a substantial cost savings to all taxpayers and at great benefit to those awaiting the system of justice."

"Perhaps if this program is successful, we can expand other court services for the out-county area where some 1.8 million people now live," he suggested.

Service employees ratify PCHA pact

Members of the Service Employees International Union Local 79 (AFL-CIO) last week ratified a new economic offer presented by the Peoples Community Hospital Authority (PCHA).

The package, which will cover the union's 1,100 members at four PCHA hospitals, was ratified by a vote of 166 to 128.

The agreement calls for a 20-cent per hour salary increase across the board for all established hourly rates, retroactive to April 8. In addition, PCHA will absorb the full cost—$114,000—of the 1976 Blue-Cross-Blue Shield increase for hourly employees.

Current PCHA retirees also will receive a 50-cent per month per year of accredited service increase in their pensions, and permanent fulltime employees will be given three personal leave days per year to be taken from the employees' sick day bank.

The agreement was reached following several months of bargaining in which both a fact finder and mediator were called in to give third-party opinions.

PCHA management is expected to approve the package.

The authority operates four hospitals—Annapolis in Wayne, Seaway in Trenton, Outer Drive in Lincoln Park and Beyer Memorial in Ypsilanti. A fifth hospital—Heritage—is under construction and is expected to be open to accept patients in February 1977.

Fifteen plays fill theatres' '76-77 season

Fifteen plays representing five centuries of drama will be presented by Wayne State University (WSU) at the Hilberry and Bonstelle theatres during the 1976-77 season, according to Leonard Leone, director of the WSU Theatre.

The schedule includes the Hilberry repertory of seven plays, the Bonstelle series of six, and two firsts — the debut of a new Black Theatre Touring Company and the first annual Blakely scholarship benefit.

The combined seasons, playing from October to June, will draw from the classics, modern drama, commedia dell'arte, black theatre, French farce, musicals, and stage adaptations of narrative literature. Shakespeare, Moliere, Goldoni, Turgeniev, Feydeau, Shaw, Melville, Rodgers and Hart, Orson Welles and more recent playwrights will be represented.

Following revivals of Shakespeare's "As You Like It" and Moliere's "The Miser," held over from last year and re-opening Oct. 8 and 15, the Hilberry Graduate Repertory Company will open its new season with "Journey of the Fifth Horse" by Ronald Ribman, adapted from Turgeniev's "Diary of a Superfluous Man." It will be presented for Theatre Sponsors at the President's Preview on Nov. 12 and will open officially Nov. 17.

Other plays to be added to the repertory and their official opening dates are "The Lion in Winter" by James Goldman, Dec. 15;

Shakespeare's "Othello," Feb. 2; Orson Welles' "Moby Dick—Rehearsed," an adaptation of Melville's novel, March 2, and G. B. Shaw's "You Never Can Tell," April 20.

Following the repertory season, the theatre's new Black Theatre Touring Company will introduce its first production, "The Sty of the Blind Pig," at the Hilberry. Performances of the Phillip Hayes Dean play are scheduled for June 1 through 4. It will be available for tour bookings during 1977-78.

The Bonstelle Theatre series will begin Oct. 15 with "The First Breeze of Summer" by Leslie Lee. It will be followed by Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," opening Nov. 26; Rodgers and Hart's "Pal Joey," beginning Feb. 4; Goldoni's "The Servant of Two Masters" on March 11; "Five on the Black Hand Side" by Charlie L. Russell on April 22, and "Hotel Paradiso" by Georges Feydeau and Maurice Desvallieres on May 27. Bonstelle plays run for two weekends, the musical "Pal Joey" for three.

The Studio Theatre, downstairs at the Hilberry, is offering the Theatre's first annual scholarship benefit production, Lanford Wilson's off-Broadway success "Hot L. Baltimore," Oct. 21-23 and 28-30. Proceeds will go to the Blakely Scholarship Fund.

Brochures with complete play schedules and ticket information will be available in September.

Museum exhibition surveys industry

The traveling Bicentennial exhibit, "Industrial Heritage U.S.A.," has returned for its third summer of display at Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, following a 9-month tour of 35 metropolitan areas across the United States.

Developed by Greenfield Village and Henry Ford Museum in cooperation with 26 industrial organizations, "Industrial Heritage U.S.A." illustrates the dramatic changes in American life that have resulted from the inventions in industry, commerce and agriculture in the 200 years since our nation's birth.

Literally hundreds of artifacts have been selected from the collections of the village and museum for the exhibits which trace America's industrial progress by contrasting the products of the past with those of today. Individual showcases center on the evolution of such diverse areas as home entertainment, home lighting, the bath, the kitchen, farm equipment, clothing and electrical power.

"Industrial Heritage U.S.A." opened to the public for the first time at Henry Ford Museum on July 4, 1974. Since then, the display has brought acclaim to the village and museum from Congress, state governors and legislators, city officials and educators at every level. Following Labor Day, "Industrial Heritage U.S.A." will again embark on its nationwide tour, returning to Henry Ford Museum in November and December 1976.

Whether on tour or at the Museum, "Industrial Heritage U.S.A." is a logical extension of the educational purpose of the village and museum and broadens that function by reaching beyond the physical boundaries of the Museum complex itself.

There is no additional charge for "Industrial Heritage U.S.A." beyond the regular Museum admission.

American county fair tradition fills August

Last month of summer features 43

The county fair — like apple pie and baseball — is an American tradition and Michigan's Calendar of Events for August lists more than 43, according to the Travel Bureau of the Michigan Department of Commerce.

Included in the number are the Jackson County Fair and Petunia Festival at Jackson, Aug. 1-7; Ingham County Fair, Aug. 2-7; Mason; the Ionia Free Fair — largest free fair of its kind — Aug. 6-15; Ionia; the Northern Michigan Fair at Cheboygan and the Western Michigan Fair at Ludington, Aug. 15-21; Upper Peninsula State Fair at Escanaba, Aug. 17-22; Northwestern Michigan Fair at Traverse City, Aug. 30-Sept. 5; and the Eastern Michigan Fair at Imlay City, Aug. 30-Sept. 6.

America's first State Fair and one of Michigan's biggest events, the Michigan State Fair, opens Aug. 27 for its annual 11-day spectacular engagement at the State Fairgrounds in Detroit. Among the names appearing on this year's star studded entertainment roster are the favorite son of TV's Good Times, "J. J.", Jimmy Walker, Boots Randolph, Freddie Fender and The Little Angels of Korea.

The complete list of fair dates is included in the Michigan Calendar of Travel Events available on request from the Travel Bureau, Michigan Department of Commerce, Lansing 48913.

All kinds of other enjoyable things will be happening around the state during the month to please all ages and all interests. On the ethnic scene is a Polish Festival at Yack Arena in Wyandotte, Aug. 6-8. Detroit's ethnic festival site on the riverfront near Cobo Hall will have the Arab World Festival in residence Aug. 6-8; the Polish Festival, Aug. 13-15; Scandinavian, Aug. 20-22; and the East Indian Festival, Aug. 27-29.

A fairy tale parade, tennis and softball tournaments, strolling bands, delicious food and refreshments are a few of the things that will attract visitors to the 12th annual Danish Festival at Greenville, Aug. 20-22.

Regular and working displays will be included in the Upper Peninsula Gem and Mineral Show in Lakeview Arena in Marquette, Aug. 6-8. Home cooking, dancing and "Islanders vs. Mainlanders" baseball game will highlight Welcome Day and Homecoming on Beaver Island, Aug. 8. The days when copper was king are the motivation for the Coppertown USA Festival, Aug. 8-15, at Calumet, thriving center of Michigan's copper boom.

Some things will be taking place on the waters around the state that should provide both entertainment and some excitement. At Lewiston, there'll be excellent examples of water skiing expertise at the annual Water Ski Show on East Twin Lake, Aug. 7-8. On Aug. 22, the Au Sable Longboat Regatta goes floating down the river from the I-75 bus loop bridge at Grayling. In addition to the parade of long, narrow, flat bottom boats, there will be a fishing contest with prizes for the largest brown and brook trout caught. More boats of a different variety will be afloat on the Grand River at Grand Haven in that city's annual Venetian Parade, Aug. 28.

One of the "north country's" favorite legendary characters and by far the greatest lumberjack of them all inspires the Paul Bunyan Festival, Aug. 12-15, at Oscoda.

Nothing is impossible during the days of the annual Magic Get-Together in Colon. This year's assembly of the world's most talented magicians and aspiring amateurs will be held Aug. 18-21.

On the "crafty" side of things there is an Art Fair in Fremont City Park, Aug. 7; the Tawas Bay Waterfront Arts and Crafts Festival, Aug. 7-8, Tawas City; Soo Arts Festival, Aug. 10-11, Sault Ste. Marie; a Craft Show at White Cloud, Aug. 13-14; Outdoor Arts and Crafts Festival, Aug. 14, Holland; Art On the Asphalt, Aug. 19, Ishpeming; and the Arts and Crafts Fair in Richard Park, Bellaire, Aug. 21. For those who enjoy yesterday's treasures try the Antique Auto Show and Swap at Charlton Park near Hastings, or the Antique Market in Ann Arbor, both scheduled for Aug. 15 or the Antique Show in Grand Haven, Aug. 19-21.

Historically speaking, the best place to get the biggest helping of Americana, anytime, is Greenfield Village and the Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn. This month, the annual Colonial Military Muster re-enacts 18th century military maneuvers with costumed militiamen and authentic weapons of the Revolution, Aug. 28-29. In addition, there will be parades, fife and drum music and displays of Colonial crafts. Continuing Bicentennial "specials" include "The Struggle and The Glory", "Industrial Heritage USA" and "History of Political Parties in the U.S." exhibits, the Menlo Park Centennial and the Greenfield Village Players presentation of "Our American Cousin" every Friday and Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m.

Baseball, softball, thoroughbred and harness racing and some fine fishing also are on the August agenda. To keep up on all that's going on in Michigan in August, and every month of the year, write for a free copy of the Michigan Calendar of Travel Events.

Animal musicians

A dog, cat and chicken is a strange combination for a musical group, but they serve as the basis for the musical comedy "Sacramento Fifty Miles", one of the plays being staged in Wayne State University's Summer Theatre

Festival. Handling the animal roles in the play by Eleanor and Ray Harder are Michael Tylo as the chicken, Deborah Eckols as the cat and Michel Cullen as the dog. For ticket information contact the Hilberry Theatre at 577-2972.

Albee's 'Seascape' opens at Hilberry Studio Theatre

The 1975 Pulitzer Prize winning drama, "Seascape" by Edward Albee, had its Detroit premiere this week at Wayne State University's Hilberry Studio Theatre.

Performances of the play will continue through Aug. 14, with shows at 8:30 p.m. Wednesdays through Saturdays.

Winner of both Pulitzer and Tony awards, "Seascape" was Albee's first play in three years. He is best known for "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf."

The setting of the play is an isolated Atlantic beach, where a picnicking couple are suddenly joined by another party. However, that latter couple — Sarah and Leslie — are man-sized lizards.

Shades of television's "Twilight Zone", Albee handles the abstract situation in a way to make the confrontation a witty probe of the process of living.

Playing the roles of the human couple are Michel Cullen and Harper Jane McAdoo. Both are members of the Hilberry Graduate Repertory Company, and Miss McAdoo is artist-in-residence at the theatre. The sea creatures are played by George C. Kappaz and Deborah A. Pietruska, both undergraduate theatre majors.

Directing the production is Robert T. Hazzard, with set design and lighting by Tony Eldis and costumes by Susan Lambeth.

The Studio is situated downstairs at the Hilberry and seats approximately 160 people. Reservations may be made by calling 577-2972.

Huron County: It's historical, agricultural Wondering what to do during your vacation this year?

Historical, recreational and agricultural Huron County at the tip of Michigan's "thumb" offers the casual visitor and the take-your-time vacationer unlimited opportunity for discovery and enjoyment, according to a spokesman for the Travel Bureau of the Michigan Department of Commerce.

It's unhurried, uncluttered and unwilling to become pseudo sophisticated and somewhat reluctant to accept every "new fangled" idea as real progress, the spokesman added.

The spirit of Michigan's prosperous lumbering era, for example, is alive and well and resides quietly in Huron City, a village that is a preservation of an impressive and illustrious past.

The town was built by Langdon Hubbard about 1855 and became the center of operations for the Hubbard sawmill and extensive timber holdings. Forest fires destroyed the town in 1871 and again in 1881. Hubbard-rebuilt the city both times, first to continue the lumbering enterprise, but the second time as an agricultural and trading center.

Seven buildings line the main street of Huron City today, three of which stand on their original foundations. Each of the buildings house authentic (many original) furnishings and fixtures, artifacts and memorabilia reflecting the many facets of its thriving past and notable residents. There's the chink and mortar log cabin (circa 1825), the Langdon Hubbard General Store, Community House Inn, carriage shed, Coast Guard Station, Huron City Church where the pulpit eloquence of Professor William Lyon Phelps attracted a mammoth congregation from hundreds of miles for forty summers, and, the new fireproof brick museum which contains much of Professor Phelps' valuable summer library.

Several of the walls of the museum are adorned with murals depicting pioneer life in Huron City, painted by Mrs. Annabel Phelps. Instead of her signature, Mrs. Phelps identified her work with her Irish Setter, Rufus.

Edgar A. Guest, Michigan's poet laureate, was a close friend and golfing buddy of Professor Phelps. In 1935, Guest wrote a poem about the Huron City Church. One of the stanzas says of the building: "There is no gothic architecture to attract the passer by, There is no dome of massive people towering far into the sky, And you would never guess its glory, never stop at it to state, Never dream as you rush past it of the beauty dwelling there. But of all God's holy places there is none holier to me, Than that church in Huron City, where the service starts at three."

Although Huron City is referred to as a ghost town, it is far from fading into oblivion. From July through Labor Day, you're invited to turn off M-25 and turn back the pages of time...to stroll through the village and visit the buildings guided by a young lady straight from the 1800s...and even attend Sunday services.

Right next door to Huron City is Grindstone City, once a bustling town centered around a booming grindstone industry. The grindstone rock quarried here was reputed to be of the finest quality to be found anywhere and the stones - ranging from a small as three pounds to as large as six tons - were shipped to every corner of the world. With the coming of carborundum and emery, however, grindstones became obsolete and Grindstone City's last quarry was closed in 1929.

Evidence of the industry still is visible, but today Grindstone City is primarily a summer resort. The harbor has two marinas open to the public with boat launching sites and camping facilities in the immediate vicinity. Fishing yields catches of perch, bass, rainbow and brown trout, even some coho salmon now and then.

You'll find more good fishing as well as swimming, trails to hike and beautiful campsites set in the tranquility of Port Crescent State Park, Port Austin and Sleeper State Park, Caseville. If you're not a camper, the area offers a wide variety of accommodations from housekeeping cottages to luxury motels. If you prefer golf to fishing, you'll enjoy both the challenge and the beauty of Caseville's 9-hole course and the 18-hole Verona Hills course just east of Bad Axe at Verona on M-142.

Follow M-142 on east to Lake Huron and you'll run into Harbor Beach where boating enthusiasts and fresh water sailors are attracted to the largest man-made harbor in the world. The town also is the birthplace of Frank Murphy whose impressive career included service as mayor of Detroit, governor general of the Philippines, governor, Michigan, attorney general of the United States and U.S. Supreme Court justice. His father's law office, where Frank began his own law practice, and the living quarters where he was born now are the Frank Murphy museum, open to the public from late June through August.

Huron County, in addition to being a refreshing and relaxing vacation area, contributes much to the agricultural economy of the state. The small town of Kinde, just south of Port Austin, is said to be the bean capital of the world. More navy beans are grown, harvested and bought from the Kinde region than any other market anywhere.

Sugar beets are another major commodity of the county and the large processing plant of the Michigan Sugar Co. at Sebewaing on Saginaw Bay, refines the beets into the sweetener we all know and love. Here too, the boaters, camper, fisherman and historian will find much to explore and enjoy.

There's good hunting in Huron County on foot and on the wing. In winter there's snowmobiling, cross country-skiing, ice fishing, broom ball and the Port Austin Winter Carnival the first week in February.

For further information on Huron County as well as other unique and interesting vacation destinations in Michigan during the four seasons of the year, contact the Travel Bureau, Michigan Department of Commerce, Lansing 48913.

Esther "Granny" Cant was a recent guest of honor at a birthday celebration sponsored by the Romulus Senior Citizens. A long time-resident of Romulus, she turned 91 years old July 16.

Mrs. Cant marks her 91st birthday

A long-time resident of Romulus celebrated another birthday recently, but this time it was a special one.

Mrs. Esther "Granny" Cant turned 91 last Friday and area residents joined in the birthday celebration sponsored by the Romulus Senior Citizens.

Her son, Jack Cant, gave her a corsage which was furnished by the staff of the Romulus Recreation Department. The staff includes Director Marie Debuyscher, Assistant Director Joan Haubrich, and Gail Youtsey, Vicki Brainard and Wilma Pomroy.

Mayor James Stewart presented her with a certificate of service to the city.

In tune with the celebration, a cake was furnished by Dorothy Icenogle, Marian Guyor, and Emily Bloom.

Council to meet

The Citizens Health Advisory Council will hold its charter membership meeting at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 9 at the Sumpter Family Medical Center, 19130 Sumpter Road, Sumpter Township.

The council has been founded to help stimulate community activity directed toward health care needs. The three communities of Belleville and Sumpter and Van Buren townships have teamed up for the project.

Since citizen input is vital to the success of the council, interested residents are urged to attend the meeting, become a charter member and help make the total community a healthier place to live in, a council spokesman said.

For further information on the advisory council contact Phyllis Cebula, health education assistant of the Wayne County Cooperative Extension Service, at 721-6550.

In Senate race

Faust endorses O'Hara

State Sen. William Faust (D-Westland) today announced his endorsement of Congressman James G. O'Hara, Democratic contender for the U.S. Senate in the August primary election.

Faust said he is supporting O'Hara because of the congressman's "outstanding record of leadership" in the areas of employment, energy, education and the environment.

"Jim O'Hara has consistently supported policies and programs designed to create more jobs," Faust said.

"He demanded openness in government, even before it became popular."

"He has been a leader in the Congressional fight for expanded educational opportunities for all-Americans."

"Time and time again, Jim O'Hara has demonstrated his integrity, his ability and his leadership."

O'Hara is seeking election to the U.S. Senate after winning election to the U.S. House of Representatives in nine successive elections. The Michigan Democrat is currently a member of the Committee on Education and Labor and the new House Committee on the Budget. He is also the chairman of the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education.

The Michigan Democrat was the sponsor of the original Manpower Development and Training Act, providing retaining programs for workers made jobless by automation and technological changes in our economy. O'Hara also was the author of the first public service jobs program, which was vetoed by former President Richard Nixon.

He presently is working to enact expanded jobs programs to reduce our high level of unemployment in Michigan and the nation.

O'Hara is a graduate of the University of Detroit High School, the University of Michigan, and the University of Michigan Law School.

A veteran of World War II, O'Hara saw action in the Pacific Theater as an army paratrooper.

Bowman seeks cost control at all government levels

Cost control in government should be exercised at all levels, according to State Senator John T. Bowman (D-Roseville), chairman of the Senate Taxation Committee.

Bowman is co-sponsor of a successful move to place before voters in the November general election a proposal to limit state spending to 8.3 percent of its total personal income.

He also has announced plans to introduce legislation this fall that will place cost controls on school districts, municipalities and counties.

Bowman's proposal will call for property tax revenues in municipalities and counties to be limited to the amount collected the previous year subject to an increase that would be based on statewide growth in property values. Consideration also would be given to population gains. Local or county voters could exempt their government from that limitation one year at a time. Otherwise, if the limitation were exceeded, the municipality or county would be penalized with reduced state revenue sharing payments and a downward adjustment in the base levy for computing future growth.

The school district cost control proposal would place a lid on the amount a local district could increase its per pupil expenditures with provisions included for districts which experience declining enrollment.

Widow/Widower Groups

There are many problems widows and widowers encounter. Many of these problems have been met and solved before by others. There are national and local groups that may be helpful to the widowed.

THEOS, a national, non-denominational organization founded in 1962 by Dea Decker in Pittsburgh, takes its name from the purpose of the group: They Help Each Other Spiritually. THEOS is helpful to the young and middle-aged, recently bereaved individual who needs to work through this period of transition (from shock and mourning to re-entry into a useful role in society).

Parents Without Partners, Inc., an international, non-sectarian, educational organization, is another useful group widows and widowers may wish to be informed about. There are about 500 chapters in the United States and Canada. They are primarily concerned with the interests and welfare of single parents and their children. The group has a large proportion of divorced persons among its membership.

American Association of Retired Persons is a very large and organized group nationally, with personal benefits to members over 55. These should all be considered by widows and widowers as they get ready to re-enter social life.

For more information on these groups, stop in or phone us about them. We welcome your questions—in private or publicly, through this column.

Romance and Bicentennial fill Cranbrook Greek Theatre

Gentle romance and Bicentennial themes—both humorous and colorful—highlight three full-length plays to be performed in the outdoor Cranbrook

Greek Theatre by the senior group of Cranbrook Theatre School. As the grand finale of the summer program, the high school and college participants will present at 8:30 p.m. Aug. 3-4 George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart's satire "George Washington Slept Here," Robert Nathan's haunting, romantic classic "Portrait of Jennie," Aug. 6 and 7, and John DosPassos's colorful panorama of early 20th century America, "U.S.A.," Aug. 10 and 11.

In "George Washington Slept Here," Kaufman and Hart relate the results of the Fuller family's attempt to realize the American dream of "a little place in the country" by buying a sentimental old house with an historical background.

Nathan's "Portrait of Jennie" combines mystery and romance in a deceptively simple story about a young painter and the child-girl-woman he sketches in the park.

"U.S.A.," from the well-known novel, offers an exciting look at the first third of the 20th century. Making much use of headlines and celebrities of the times, it is the story of J. Ward Morehouse, born on the July 4, 1901.

All are open to the public. Tickets at $2 per person, are available at the door, 400 Lone Pine Road.

Keep pools safe

Despite the fun and convenience of having a swimming pool in the backyard, the home pool can be dangerous when safety rules are not followed.

These suggestions will help to insure a safe summer in and around a pool:

- Never permit anyone to swim alone and never leave a child unattended for any length of time.
- See that the pool has adequate fencing and a gate with a lock to prevent children from unauthorized entry.

- Keep basic rescue and lifesaving equipment readily available.

- Make sure at least one responsible person knows how to administer artificial respiration and give proper first aid.

- Do not allow running, pushing or boisterous play on the pool's deck.
- Make sure there is adequate filtration to insure clean water.

- Do not allow pool users to bring glass, bottles or sharp objects into the pool area.

Sports

champ, the tournament title is up for grabs. Jawor won it a year ago by carding a 73 and 70 for a 143 total.

Also up for grabs will be the city titles for Wayne, Inkster and Canton.

"I see a dogfight in almost every city," said Bill Hawley, tournament manager. "We have an excellent field this year and I wouldn't want to pick a tournament favorite at this time."

The annual tournament is held to determine separate city championships for amateur male golfers of the five competing cities: Wayne, Westland, Garden City, Inkster and Canton Township.

The tournament is open to all residents or those who work for a tax-paying or tax-supported institute in any of the five cities and one of the goals is to determine five-man teams that will represent the cities in the Michigan Parks and Recreation's state tournament.

The low five scorers from each city are eligible to play on the city team in the state tournament. (The date and site of the MPRA's state tournament have not been revealed as yet). All other golfers will become alternates in order of finish.

Only bona fide residents can represent a city at the state tourney.

Trophies will be awarded to first, second and third place finishers in each flight and additional flights will be established for each city if the total entry of that city is sufficient.

There also will be a medalist (low scorer) trophy to the tournament champ.

In case of a tie for any trophy, a "sudden death" playoff will be held to determine the winner. Golfers will play 18 holes on Saturday and return Sunday to play the final round of 18 holes.

The terrors of the 6,210-yard, 72-par course include a 405-yard, par 4 No. 2 hole which is guarded by two enormous trees that block the approach to the green on the left side; a 390-yard No. 7 hole that could cause plenty of trouble if the competitor overshoots the green.

The terrain on that hole drops off sharply if the ball is overshot.

On the No. 10, 340-yards, par 4 hole, the competitor should drive out at least 200 yards to have a clear shot back across the creek to the green.

And on the 11th hole, a 220-yard, par 3, the golfer is faced with an elevated green that drops sharply to the right. Anything hit high on the right side goes into the creek; anything over the fence immediately left of the green is out of bounds.

There are dense woods to the left of the 475-yards, par 5, 16 hole which makes for a narrow fairway that opens up just short of the green.

That's just a few of the challenges the golfers will face on a course described as "in excellent condition," by Hawley.

Golfers who wish to rent carts - there are a limited number - are urged to call Fellows Creek (728-1300) and make reservations.

If you need more info...

If a golfer needs further information or is unable to find his name in the above pairings, please contact the Associated Newspapers sports desk on Friday.

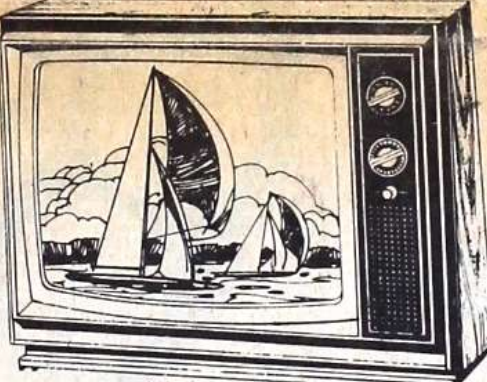

Our office telephone number is 729-4000.

Also, there will be no refunds after the first round of play (18-holes).

J & D Auto widens title lead in Wayne

It's all but over in the Wayne Parks and Recreation Women's Softball League.

Sweeping three games last week, league-leading J & D Auto Parts built up a three-game edge over Hope Car, Inc. and the Flim Flam and all but clinched the championship.

J & D's has an 8-0 record, entering the final two weeks of regular competition.

J & D's snapped a 2-all tie against Jake's Lounge with a 4-run spurt en route to a 12-5 victory over the fourth place team. Bea Bassett, the winning pitcher, helped her cause with a run-scoring triple. Gail Smith and Jan Plevic both checked in with two hits while Lou Hoefft accounted for three singles off of loser Mallory Newton.

Miss Newton got one of her team's hits, a two-run double. Mate Roberta Morris latched on to two singles.

J & D's also used a 14-hit assault to humble Flim Flam, 14-7, earlier in the week. Rose Boline roughed up a pair of Flim Flam pitchers Pat Bledsoe and Mary Lanning with a homer and a couple of singles.

Smith and Bassett chipped in with three hits each and Sherrie Soltis belted two singles.

Mary Porter led the loser's 8-hit assault with three singles, one driving in a run. Pat Henke was the only member of the losing team to get an extra-bases hit, slicing a run-scoring triple.

Jake's broke open a second inning

5-all deadlock with Hope Care thanks to a six-run outburst in the fifth to post a 11-6 victory over their rivals.

Mallory Newton scattered seven hits, two each to Diane Richardson and Debbie Reid and a home run to Terri Richardson to chalk up the victory.

Cindy Summers started for the losers and lasted 1 and two-thirds innings before relinquishing the mound to Terri Richardson who finished up. The two gave up a total of eight hits, two each to Helen Dozonski and Jill Laut while Pat Brock's single drove in two runs.

Flim Flam scored five runs in the top of the seventh to edge Mac Tools 7-5. Losing pitcher Renee Burnie held her rivals scoreless for five innings before giving up two runs in the sixth.

Pat Henke, Geri Starra and Ronnie Gross each counted two hits for the winners while Rocky Martin picked up a pair of singles and Ginny Hathorne tripled for the losers.

Pat Bledsoe, the winning pitcher, gave up a total of eight hits.

A late rally by Jack Demmer Ford fell short as it lost to Jake's Lounge 16-15 in their final confrontation of the season.

Demmer's exploded for seven runs in the first inning, but couldn't hang on as Jake's cut into the lead with a five-run first, scored four runs in each of the second and third frames and added three more in the fourth.

Kathy McDermid, Carol McCollum, Sheri Johnson and Polly Spangler each had two hits for Demmers who amassed 11 off of winning pitcher Newton. Loser Jane Cowell gave up a total of 11 hits, three each to Mary Merissa, Newton while Marla Miller pounded out two singles.

Jake's Kathy Brock drilled the game's lone home run.

Mac's Tool put on its finest display of the season at the plate as it buried Demmer's 22-6. Brenda Schwartz belted two homers and sister Joyce had one roundtripper for the winners.

Mac Tools received an excellent hitting performance from Rocky Martin and Renee Bernie who had two and three hits, respectively.

Bernie, the winning pitcher, gave up a pair of singles to Polly Spangler and a single and double to Jane Cawell.

Mac Tools spotted Jack Demmer Ford five runs in the first inning then came up with 14 runs in the second to win a lopsided 17-6 decision over their rivals.

In the only other game, Flim Flam scored five runs in the fifth to beat Hope Care 9-4 in a well-played defensive duel. Mary Lanning was the winning pitcher and she received ample hitting support from Ronnie Gross who blasted three singles and Dee York, who checked in with a single and double.

Losing pitcher Terri Richardson gave up a total of 10 hits.

Canton crowns champions

McMurray wins title for 5th straight year

For the fifth consecutive season, McMurray Insurance has in its possession the Canton Township Parks and Recreation slo-pitch softball championship.

The defending five-time champ clinched the 1976 title with a pair of key victories last week.

Perlongo gave the champs a lot of trouble in their first game as Mc-

Murray came from-behind with three runs in the sixth inning to win a 5-4 thriller.

Perlongo came out strong in the first with three runs as Dale Butzin walked, Frank Albrick singled and Doyle Cates doubled them both home.

Cates scored on a sacrifice fly by Jon Lash.

With Perlongo ahead 4-2 in the sixth, McMurray picked up three tallies on a single by Marty Bliven, a double by big Don Gullekson, and singles by Carl Vasquez and Bob Schebl.

McMurray had no trouble in its pennant clinching game with Plymouth Equipment, breezing 17-0. Mike Eves had three hits, including a double, Bob Schebl belted a single, double and homerun, and Frank McMurray, making a rare appearance in his team's line-up, had a single and a 3-run homer.

In other action, Massey was edged by Plymouth Equipment 7-6, and lost to Perlongo 11-9 to hold on to third place.

Clark Block and Little Caesar finished in a tie for first place in the B Division as the wild title scramble went down to the wire.

The two will have a play-off game to settle their differences.

Clark and Caesar's squared off in a defensive battle as Clark took a 4-1 victory. Doug Reynolds doubled home Rick Paulun who had singled, for the first run for Clark in the opening inning and Joe Lawson drove in Reynolds with the eventual winning run with a sacrifice fly.

Clark then beat K-Mart 13-5 but lost to last place Meijer's 4-3. Meijer's completely out-played them. Tim Bradley drove in Meijer's initial run in the first with a single, and Clark's third-base man let in two runs in the fourth with two wild throws to first.

Bradley drove in Meijer's fourth run with a sacrifice fly in the fifth. Clark rallied with three runs in the seventh after two men were out, but it wasn't enough.

Second place Dearborn Fabricating and Clark met in a thriller with Clark coming out the victor.

Dearborn went ahead 5-0 in the first two innings, aided by a two-run homer by Dan Divito.

But Clark didn't give up as Roger Pollack singled in Doug Reynolds in the fourth, and Reynolds belted a two-run homer in the sixth, Joe Lawson and Pollack singled, and Keith Morton drove in Lawson with a fielder's choice.

Clark tied it 6-6 in the sixth as Reynolds tripled in two runs for his third hit of the night.

Clark's pitcher Al Turri was ejected in the eighth inning for protesting a play at second, and Dearborn's second baseman, Joe Perko, was also ejected for fighting. He was replaced with a player who had already been taken out of the game as Dearborn had no other eligible players on the bench.

Dearborn struck for three runs in the top of the 10th, appearing to have sewn it up, but the umpires noticed the illegal player, and forfeited the game to Clark, pushing them into a tie for the top spot with Little Caesar.

Little Caesar beat Dearborn Fab earlier in the week 24-14 as Gary Truskowski and Jim Batti both blasted a single, double and home run, Steve Trahey had a single and a homer, and Randy Williams belted a single and two home-runs. Rick Black had three singles for the losers.

Caesar's also slaughtered Strock Insurance 26-3 as Jim Gatti had three hits, including two home runs, and Randy Williams, Jim Brown, and Al New each had four safeties.

Meijer's Thrifty Acres stepped out of the basement for the first time this year as they picked up three victories last week, giving them five for the year. They split a double-header with Good's Nursery, 13-7 and 6-7, beat Clark Block, as mentioned before, and nipped Deer Creek 10-7.

Mobil Lounge and Moeller finished in a tie for the top spot in the Women's League as both picked up victories. They will play-off for the championship.

South All-Stars bow to Redford

Romulus South Senior Little League All-Stars rallied for three runs in the fourth inning and went on to edge a strong Southwest Detroit contingent 5-4 in the playoffs held in Taylor.

South fell behind 3-0 in the opening inning against the Detroiters but rallied for three runs to tie the game.

Scoring two more runs in the sixth inning, South sewed up the victory, giving starting pitcher Troy Adams of Commercial Carriers the victory.

Adams gave up just two hits, struck out seven, and walked five in the decision.

Jim Thomas, Tony Cholette, Larry Oaks and Troy Adams had key hits for South.

South then met North Redford on Friday and was defeated 14-4.

Redford scored seven runs in the opening inning, which proved enough to chalk up the victory.

Adams again paced the South team with two hits. Victor Bird also provided good play for South with two hits.

Larry Oaks, Dan Cutcher, Duane Hicks, and Jim Sullivan contributed singles in the losing cause.

Losing pitcher Victor Bird lasted one inning, and was relieved by Jim Sullivan.

"I am proud of the boys," manager Barry Baumann said. And we went further than what most people expected. I am really proud of the way Victor Bird, Larry Oaks, and Troy Adams played.

"These three made it happen for the team. We really appreciated the great fan support. It was great."

South Major League team lost in the first round at tournaments held in Westland. Romulus South dropped a 5-0 decision to North Redford American.

Players for the South Major All-Stars were: Bernard Zarb, Barney Folland, Richard Goeckel, Don Treder, Dave Rhode, Jeff Mullins, Bernard Roberts, Randy Kautz, Ed Zabik, Mike O'Day, Joe Scheffer, Jim Lawrence, Leonard Grassa, Mark Wetting, George Dunn managed the All-Star team with Richard Fisher team coach.

League play resumed in the Senior League as Commercial Carriers and Polka Dot Market remain tied for 1st place.

Polka Dot rolled to a 17-9 victory over Baum Funeral Home. Commercial Carriers kept pace with a 9-5 defeat of Daly Restaurant. The league will wrap up play this week, completing a 16 game schedule.

South will hold its annual Awards Day on Sat., August 14 at 1 P.M. The affair will be held at the Romulus Progressive Hall. Later that evening, the league will sponsor a fund raising dance at the same location.

Tickets are $10 per couple, and can be obtained from any manager.

For further information call 941-3868.

Westside zeroing in on title

Capraros Lounge's hopes of picking up some ground on league-leading Westside Dompolski were shattered last week as Town & Country edged the second place team 9-7.

But Capraros had its chances. Trailing 8-1 going into the fifth inning, Capraros rallied for three runs and had a homer erased from the scoreboard when Denny Hornath's roundtripper was disallowed because he failed to touch third base.

That miscue proved costly for Capraros which came back with three more runs in the next inning and was in easy reach of tying the game.

Lee Calloway, who gave up 10 hits, was charged with the loss. Team-mates Jerry Deter, Dave Broad, Dan Christy each got two hits while Jerry Nastally collected three off of winning hurler Ken Stack.

Broad was the only player to homer in the hotly-contested duel.

Fred Shaffer, Tony LaPere and Bill Frazier each counted two hits and two runs batted in for the winners.

In other Class A action, Spicer Carpentry exploded for eight runs in the fourth to whip Garden City Sporting Goods 12-6. In that decisive fourth inning, Bob Allen sliced a bases-loaded home run, his first grand slam of the season.

Winning pitcher Harry Allen scattered nine hits, giving up four to Ron Miller who also homered and drove in two runs. Ron Robertson slashed two singles, chasing home a run.

Garden City ursed two pitchers, Al Monzon and Joe Kadlac who gave up a total of 13 hits including two each to John Patterson, Bob Allen, Steve Patterson and Ed Fucal.

Fiddle Bar continued to lead Class B, but Michigan Bell and All-Star Sports are still in the title picture. The pacesetters chalked up their eighth win in nine outings, beating Johnson Carbonic, 9-5.

Trailing 5-1 going into the fifth, Fiddle Bar got to losing pitcher Barth Bucciarelli for seven runs in the bottom of that inning to turn the game around.

Barry Faber's three-run homer and Dick Coughlin's pair of singles highlighted Johnson's attack on winning pitcher Dennis Cowell.

Fiddle Bar retaliated with a 11-hit assault upon loser Barth Bucciarelli who served up a homer to Jim Hubbs. Hubbs' teammates Gary Chesney, Gary Dargo and Al Campbell each checked in with two hits.

Johnson's failed to field a team against J&M Mason Construction Company and was defeated on a forfeit.

The All-Stars rallied for three runs in the top of the seven to edge Michigan Bell 12-11. Michigan Bell blew a 9-0 second inning lead as the All-Stars fought back to put four runs on the scoreboard in the fourth and fifth and also tallied once in the sixth.

Rick Fountaine had a prefect four-for-four day at the plate for the losers who collected 15 hits off of a pair of All-Star hurlers - John Auer and Michael Mazruson.

Terry Hoffman belted a pair of doubles and a single while Bob Ortiz tripled and singled and Ken Kinast checked in with a couple of singles for the losers.

Marty Woytovich and Delvin St. Antoine split six hits between them for the All-Stars. Mates Paul Lambert and Gerry Wood each had two safeties for the winners.

Michigan Bell put its game together for sixth place J & M as Hoffman turned in a five-hitter to shut out his rivals, 10-0. J&M helped with its own demise by committing 10 errors.

Hoffman gave up five singles, two to Charlie Sobezak, and one each to John Wood, Gary Reid and Don Vincent.

Hoffman helped his case with a pair of singles and teammates Greg Lewis, Jack Chidester each had two hits while Rich Tolor's single counted for two RBI's.

In a Class C matchup between NBA Lab and Jac's Lounge, NBA emerged atop of an 8-4 score to stay close on the heels of the league-leading Knights of Columbus (9-1).

NBA and The Four Seasons are tied for second with 8-3 records.

NBA struck for five runs in the third innings, however, Jac's closed the gap to 6-4 in the top of the sixth but two NBA runs in the bottom of the inning went unanswered.

Michigan August Primary

(Reaching 400,000 households in Michigan)

In Dem, GOP races

Eight eye Senate nominations

Eight candidates, four in each party, are competing for the two major party nominations for the U.S. Senate in next Tuesday's election.

The list includes a large number of political veterans, including three Congressmen who have put their jobs on the line to make the race. Here are thumbnail sketches, listed alphabetically and by party, of the eight candidates:

DEMOCRATS

AUSTIN

-- Richard Austin, Michigan's Secretary of State, is a certified public accountant who has held his current job since first being elected in 1970. At 63, he is the oldest of the candidates. He is a veteran of Democratic politics and was the first black man to hold statewide office in Michigan, winning re-election in 1974 by more than one million votes.

O'HARA

-- James O'Hara, a Congressman for 18 years, has worked his way into the upper echelons of the House. The 53-year-old lawmaker is a lawyer. He is a member of the powerful House Budget Committee. O'Hara has solid liberal credentials in the House and has the backing this year of the Michigan AFL-CIO. He has been active in efforts to weaken the seniority system and modernize the House.

ELSMAN

-- James Elsmann, a Birmingham attorney, is the maverick in the race. Elsmann, 39, is accepting no campaign contributions and is running a low budget campaign. His biggest impact on the campaign has been almost single-handedly forcing Austin to stop accepting political contributions from secretary of state branch managers.

RIEGLE

-- Donald Riegle, a Congressman for the past 10 years, started out as a Republican when he won his first term in 1966. He switched to the Democratic Party in 1973, saying it was more compatible with his philosophy. At 38, he is the youngest of the eight candidates. He has been highly critical of Congress, particularly of the seniority system, and has written a book which criticized Congress.

REPUBLICANS

BAKER

-- Deane Baker, an Ann Arbor businessman and University of Michigan Regent, is making his first bid for the Senate after several flirtations in the past. Baker, 51, is president of a firm which develops office and industrial parks, together with real estate ventures. His campaign has featured a bicycle trip of several hundred miles.

HUBER

-- Robert Huber, a former Congressman who served one term in Washington, is a successful Troy businessman. Huber, 53, has held governmental posts at the city, county and state level as well as federal. He is making his second try for the Senate. His first, in 1970, came within an eyelash of wresting the GOP nomination away from Lenore Romney, the wife of former Gov. George Romney.

BRENNAN

-- Thomas Brennan, a former Chief Justice of the Michigan Supreme Court, is President of Cooley Law School in Lansing. Brennan, 47, is a founder of the school and quit the court in 1973 to devote full time to it. He was a judge in the Detroit Common Pleas Court and the Wayne County Circuit Court before election to the high court in 1966.

ESCH

-- Marvin Esch, a Congressman for the past 10 years, was a consultant in labor relations and an educator prior to entering politics. Esch, 48, represents a district that is considered either a "swing" or "Democratic" district. He is ranking Republican on the House Manpower Subcommittee of the House Education and Labor Committee and has been active in writing legislation in the labor field.

Panax endorses:

Donald Riegle

There is a sense of frustration involved in publishing a special pre-election supplement such as this.

It results from all the time and effort put into the research on and interviewing of candidates and a wish that each of our readers could go through the same process. That's because all the work involved in putting this together has given us a much clearer — and much different — view of the candidates than we had when we started several months ago.

That process has led us to the choice of Congressman Donald Riegle as the man who would make the best Democratic candidate for the United States Senate.

Riegle's two major opponents for the nomination — Secretary of State Richard Austin and Congressman James O'Hara — both have laudable records in public service. At another time, either one might have been our choice. But for 1976, the choice is Riegle.

His answers to our questions were the most knowledgeable of the three men and the most thoughtful. There is an intensity about Riegle which comes through in a person-to-person situation — a feeling that he cares very deeply about the problems he's discussing.

We called people, both Republicans and Democrats, from his home district in Flint and they unanimously gave him high marks on his work in the House. He has, they said, worked his tail off in the House and he'd do the same in the Senate. Equally as important, he has always listened to all sides of a question before making a decision. His door has been open to anyone who wanted to come in and make himself heard.

Michigan is going through a severe strain at the moment — a time of high unemployment aggravated by national forces which have cut back on the sales of our major product — the automobile. It is a situation that isn't going to correct itself soon. It needs the attentions of a senator who can give it his attention next year and for many years to come. Riegle's age — 38 — means he has both the energy and the time to fill that need.

We don't agree with him on all his positions, and don't expect to in the future. But the important thing is that he cares, he listens to all sides and he works his tail off.

He deserves the vote of those who will vote in the Democratic primary Tuesday.

John P. McGoff
President

Marvin Esch

There is no doubting the quality of the field in the Republican Senate primary contest this year.

Each of the four men has been successful in his chosen profession up to now, two as businessmen, one as a judge and legal educator and one as a labor relations expert and then congressman. Each has qualities that would serve the people of this state well.

But as there are similarities, there are differences. In our lengthy interviews with each candidate, plus our research into them, a clear choice emerges from among them.

That choice is Congressman Marvin Esch.

Esch has won election five times from a district that is considered a Democratic district. That in itself says something about his strength as a candidate and his performance in office.

What impressed us most about Esch, however, was his knowledge of the major issues facing the state and nation and his ability to weave his way through the most complex of them and deal with them in a clear, concise nature. He knows, in short, not only what the problems are but what some realistic means of working on them might be.

We were intrigued, for example, by his suggestion that it might be the right time for Congress to quit passing laws for a couple of years and just take stock of what it has done and how well that is working. It's an idea that has been getting backing in one form or another from all across the political spectrum, and which he voiced as concisely as anyone has.

Esch has one other advantage over his opponents — his 10 years of experience in Congress as an effective member. That is long enough to give valuable experience without being too long in terms of losing touch with the people back home, as has happened to so many of the old-timers in Washington.

In other words he could start to work right away, rather than having to take a couple of years to learn the terrain.

This is not, in any way, to derogate the attributes of his three opponents. It merely says he is the best qualified.

As such, he deserves the vote of those who will vote in the Republican primary on Tuesday.

John P. McGoff
President

Special edition focuses on Tuesday's primary

Next Tuesday, Michigan voters will choose nominees for the fall General Election contest to succeed U.S. Sen. Philip Hart in the United States Senate.

In order to give our readers a chance to study each candidate and gain some insight into his views and thought processes, Panax newspapers is publishing this special pre-primary section.

It contains the results of interviews with each of the eight candidates. The interviews were conducted by a panel of Panax editors and reporters.

Those who participated in one or more of the interviews were: Panax President John McGoff, Panax Vice President for Administration Harry Buckel, Panax Southeast Michigan Editorial Coordinator Clem Brossier, Macomb Daily Editor Mitch Kehetian, Marquette Mining Journal Editor Bob Skuggen, Mining Journal reporters Dave Guilford and Pete Brown, Mount Pleasant Times-News Editor Bill Diem, Mellus Newspapers Editor Jim O'Toole, Associated Newspapers Editor Bob Cochran, Dearborn Press Editor Gary Farrugia, Wyandotte News-Herald Editor Don Davenport, Panax Director of Market Research Vishwa Mishra, Lansing reporter Jim Bush and Lansing bureau chief Bob Berg.

Photography was done by Bob Sassanella of the Macomb Daily.

The next step is up to you!

This special primary section is intended to give you an overall view of Tuesday's senatorial primary and the men and issues involved in it.

The next step is up to you. That step is voting.

The American Revolution was fought because the colonists did not have the right to determine their own government. More wars have been fought and many American young men have died since then to protect that most basic right.

In this special section we have attempted to present the candidates and their positions to you in a fair and unbiased manner. We all owe it, both to our ancestors who fought for the right, and our succeeding generations, to inform ourselves and vote.

That is really what the Bicentennial is all about.

The candidates and their views

Panax editors spent more than two hours with each of the candidates for the U.S. Senate to get their views on the major problems facing the country. On the following pages we present their responses to some of those questions. The answers have been edited for the sake of brevity. The Panax discussion with each candidate, of necessity, varied slightly from interviews with his opponents. Thus, not every question was asked of each candidate.

REPUBLICANS ON: foreign affairs, Africa, detente

Q: What should Congress' role be in foreign affairs? Should it pass legislation such as the Jackson amendment tying trade agreements with Russia to Jewish emigration, should it limit arms sales to allies, or should these decisions remain with the executive branch?

Baker: The constitution says that the executive has responsibilities for foreign problems. I think it's a balance. There has to be input into it by the Congress, but the executive has got to be strong enough to stand against the Congress. Right now it is not, because of the experience of the last ten years, no actually since Roosevelt's time. You had the building of the executive to almost an omnipotent kind of situation. It's a natural conflict. The Executive through a whole series of events is now in a somewhat subservient position to the power of the Congress.

Brennan: I believe the Senate has a role to play in the area of foreign relations, particularly in that it's the responsibility of the United States Senate to advise and consent to treaties and international agreements. I am one who does not believe that it is really appropriate for the United States of America to involve itself in the internal affairs of other countries. I think some of the problems we have had in recent years in this country have come because we have attempted to involve ourselves in the internal affairs of other countries.

The details of the Jackson amendment I don't know, so to tell you how I would have voted on such a specific matter, I can only tell you what my general thinking is and what my general philosophy is.

Esch: The problem has been in the last two decades, probably especially in the last decade, that the Senate has not had a constructive role in foreign policy. I think we have to find a way of having the House and Senate be more constructive. Now I supported, for example, the War Powers Act because I think it gave the President flexibility to move in any major involvement necessary. That gave a chance for Congress to review that policy and I supported that idea. I think where we find ourselves in foreign policy today is that there is a danger in the country of becoming neoisolationist. We have to recognize that we have to fulfill our responsibilities as a world power.

I supported the Jackson movement because I think we ought to encourage open immigration we ought to do that. I don't think that we are using the power of our prestige and our support, not only military but economic power, effectively in the world as we could today. A good case of that is our relationship with the Soviet Union. I think you've got to come down very, very hard with the Soviet Union and with Cuba in terms of their involvement in Africa. In the next negotiation session on any matter with the Soviet Union we should say we have added an agenda item and that is Angola and we're not going to talk about trade, we're not going to talk about anything else. Our first agenda item is Angola and your presence in Angola.

As far as the Senate is concerned, we need to develop a closer relationship between the Foreign Affairs Committee and Foreign Relations Committee and the President. We haven't done that and I think that's needed in the next decade, but that's going to be an informal relationship that develops over a period of time.

Huber: There's going to be an ebb and flow there, it seems to me, so as far as spelling out the responsibilities of the Congress. When I was there I saw a spectrum of knowledge in the committees. The problem, it seems to me, is that there are knowledgeable people and there are people who aren't knowledgeable. When you try to set down a policy that should be followed it depends on whether you are talking about knowledgeable people or those who are not knowledgeable. That's a very difficult thing to do.

Since you can't set a policy that would apply to both those who know and those who don't, I think the Congress is the most responsible form of government of the three of the people and I think it ought to be involved in our foreign policy. I also think Congress should not try to usurp the ultimate authority. Now if the Congress finds that some particular policy of the secretary of state is in its opinion, detrimental to the overall welfare of the United States, then I think they have the obligation to interfere. But if they are only to use a partisan basis as a stumbling block to the president and the secretary of state, I think that's wrong. It's a very difficult question.

Q: What should be the U.S. role in Africa? Should the Byrd amendment allowing importation of chrome from Rhodesia be repealed? Do you endorse the Lusaka Doctrine outlined by Dr. Kissinger on his trip to Africa?

Brennan: I think it is appropriate for the United States to exercise moral leadership, to express our concepts of right and wrong in terms of race relations, in terms of other such things, as matters of general belief. But I think we should draw the line when we permit those attitudes to affect our relationships with other countries. I'm mostly impressed with the concepts that George Washington expressed in his farewell address to the nation in which he warned us against foreign entanglements, against involving ourselves in foreign intrigue, and against developing concepts of favored nation status of various countries.

Esch: We have to recognize that we have to relate to all Africans, white and black, but go back to the questions of chrome. We should buy our chrome where we can get it in the world. It is absurd that we would accept the responsibility of buying chrome through Russia or through Japan at double or triple the price and they're in turn not upholding the sanction. Quite frankly in the last 16 months I've done a great deal of studying in this area and I've changed my mind. A major problem facing the United States industry is predictability of supply of this commodity and we have to continue to purchase it.

There is a danger in what Kissinger did in Africa. He didn't need to do that. There's no reason for him to do that. He did it unilaterally and it's a prime example of what shouldn't happen. He went in unilaterally with out any involvement with community and leaders of the country that are knowledgeable in that area and also without real involvement with the members of the Senate. This is a good example of what shouldn't be done I think because if you're going to do something of that extreme nature and it really was a reversal of policy, then you're going to have to make sure that it's done over a period of time and it's done with due regard to the other.

Huber: You're talking about Rhodesian chrome. I think the problem here is prior to the Byrd amendment, we were still getting Rhodesian chrome, only it was coming through Moscow, in some cases still in the Rhodesian crates, at a premium price. Everyone was saying "Thank God we're not buying Rhodesian chrome. Now we're buying Russian chrome and we're not violating any of the rights of the Rhodesian people." We cannot exist as an industrial nation without stainless steel. Chrome is a fundamental part of stainless steel, plus a lot of other steels. I don't think it's a question of are we going to teach Rhodesia a lesson by not buying chrome. If it's essential to our economy, then we have to sit down and figure out what is the least offensive way of maintaining our nation's national status without jeopardizing our security. From a practical point of view, we can never afford to cut off those vital elements that we are not self sufficient in. I'm not excusing the Rhodesian situation, but from a practical point of view, we've got to buy the chrome.

If we turn our back on the strategic problem of Africa in order to placate a black militant movement we are being penny wise and pound foolish. Today's world, with its constant tensions and ebb and flow that are going on constantly we have to adopt a realistic position in which the American nation comes first. The survival of our country ought to be of paramount importance in dictating our policies. Today I think Africa is of tremendous importance in the peace and security of the world. We are forced to be involved in those situations, whether in Africa or any place that we have something that is critical to our security.

Q: What are your feelings about detente? Do you think that that's been an even-handed relationship or do you think that we have been taken advantage of?

Esch: It's difficult to generalize on that in one area. My own personal feeling is that we ought to come down much harder on Soviet Union, especially if you relate to the problems of immigration and the captive nations. Last June 11 in the Baltic countries they imposed a 100 percent surcharge on all packages going in to the Baltic countries. That's a way of informal coercion where they won't allow the families to send to basic commodities. Likewise, if you fly to an airport you're not allowed to go outside 50 or 100 km away from the airport in those countries and then they force the nationals to come in and meet their families near the airport as a means of control and coercion. That way they are very reluctant to come because they are watched.

Now if we are really concerned about detente about the rights of humans then we should be concerned with telling the Soviet Union we're going to use our economic power to say that we should reject that.

What do we gain from detente? Well we are gaining some markets and I would expect the degree that the Soviet Union can be dependent on us to furnish them with food, materials, in the long run that is probably better.

Huber: I listened to Solzhenitsyn discuss this recently and I thought if anybody understands whether we're making progress in detente, he does, and the people behind the Iron Curtain do. He said as far as he was concerned there had been a substantial breakdown in the regard of Russia and other states for the United States in view of this detente policy, to the point where he thinks we are considerably weaker. As a matter of fact, he was sure he could not have gotten out of Russia today where he did get out two years ago. I think that's a pretty good illustration. I think we have demonstrated and shown the world a side of weakness to our nature that a lot

DEMOCRATS ON: foreign affairs, Africa, detente

Q: What should Congress' role be in foreign affairs? Should it pass legislation such as the Jackson amendment tying trade agreements with Russia to Jewish emigration, should it limit arms sales to allies, or should these decisions remain with the executive branch?

Austin: The responsibility for foreign affairs is, of course, that of the executive branch. I feel that Congress, as representative of the nation's population, should be in a position to react to the decisions of the administration and should have some power to influence the administration in its decisions. I think a very clear demonstration of the effectiveness of Congress in helping the executive to correct and even improve on this perspective in foreign policy is what happened with Angola. The administration was very definitely headed down a path which is similar to our involvement in Viet Nam, where I think we got in very deep with a government that was not representative of the people and we were headed in the same direction in Angola until members of Congress got exercised over it.

Elsman: My whole life has been devoted to the area of foreign policy and international law is what I practice now. So that's my area of expertise. The United States Senate has peculiar responsibilities in that area because the constitution gives them the power to approve treaties. On terms of the role of the United States Senate, I believe our role should be very specific because we have generally let policy drift toward the executive.

Q: What should be the U.S. role in Africa? Should the Byrd amendment allowing importation of chrome from Rhodesia be repealed? Do you endorse the Lusaka Doctrine outlined by Dr. Kissinger on his trip to Africa?

Elsman: The simplicity of our policy should be based upon the origins of this country, which was founded on a principle of self-determination. Period. We must support that policy in the world -- wherever the issue arises -- and particularly in Africa. The only concern, once you set that policy, is to avoid bloodshed because, you know, frankly I am a Christian by background and I do not believe in following principle to the extent where you are going to maximize bloodshed. Somewhere there's a compromise in there whereby we can phase in self-determination without shouting it from the rooftops. Now we want the Africans to take over South Africa, for example.

With regard to the Byrd amendment, I do not support it. I believe that we have a good way to go in providing leadership in the United Nations and generally we may be disappointed sometimes with the nature of that body's work, but our job is to reform it. I would rather reform that body than rebuke its resolutions which have some grain of reasonableness to them.

In regard to the Lusaka declaration, I think it's too little too late. It's one of these situations where you are trying to buy good will post-facto. I think the facts of the rush toward self-determination in Africa are far beyond the United States' foreign policy. I'm very critical of Henry Kissinger and basic American idealism for, especially in our 200th year, not supporting African self-determination before this.

Riegle: Well, I think the United States has basically been very, very late in responding to the realities of Africa. This ties right back to the initial point that Kissinger has really run a one-man operation now for several years. And as a result, because it's impossible within any one person's physical and mental limits to do this whole job, what's happened is that we've been late in situation after situation. For Kissinger to go and make a speech now that it's time to shift affirmatively toward majority rule really comes too late for that statement to mean much. It is to speak something that's so obvious that it really has a hollow ring to it of the United States just really coming to jump on the bandwagon. That's not leadership.

I think that we ought to be on the side of majority rule in Africa and I think we ought to do everything we can to facilitate transfer of power in a way that minimizes disruption, minimizes the chance for violence. It's an explosive situation and I worry about that because in those kinds of situations it's like a teeter-totter, and when it starts to tip, it tips all at once. You can have widespread killing and other things happening that I very much would like to see avoided anywhere in the world.

I've always, myself, in terms of my own votes in the Congress, supported the U. N. sanctions against Rhodesia on chrome and that's my position today. I think there are ways for us to get the chrome we need without doing it in a way that violates our basic ethics and our moral values. And I guess the thing that disturbs me most, and I've been on foreign policy committees in the Congress now for ten years and worked directly across the table from the last three secretaries of state -- Rusk, Rogers and Kissinger -- is that what I don't find in our foreign policy is any moral foundation to it. I don't find there clearly what the United States stands for, in terms of that ending up being an integral part of our foreign policy abroad.

Austin: I feel we should be reluctant to do business with a country where the leadership is not representative of the people. We in this country believe in majority rule, and if we are going to be in peace and harmony with other nations as we can encourage more nations to devout governments that are representative of the people. Where the government does, in fact, represent the will of the majority of the people. I think that is the concise answer to the question.

In Africa, and in other countries, it is my feeling that the United States should not attempt to do for these countries what they should be doing for themselves. We should not actually get into a country and try to govern a country. We should offer aid and assistance to the government and the people without attempting to take over the function of government.

Q: What is your position on detente? Do you think that it is an even affair where both the U.S. and Russia are getting equal benefits.

Riegle: I think the Russians are very tough customers, they're hard bargainers. I think they mean us no good; I think they'll take advantage of any situation that arises when they can do so. This is another illustration of the fact that we have such a narrow base under our foreign policy in which you've got one person conducting foreign policy out of his hip pocket, namely, Secretary Kissinger, has really made us vulnerable in our relationships with the Soviet Union. I don't think we're given them the time and the tough mindedness that they require.

I have the feeling that we've really been playing into the hands of the Russians for years. I think the biggest place where that happened was in Viet Nam. Our involvement in Viet Nam was the best thing that ever happened to the Russians as we were bleeding ourselves dry in a really hopeless situation. They were able to, with an investment of maybe 3 to 5 billion dollars, get us to invest something on the order of 25 to 45 billion dollars a year, and it even got substantially higher than that.

If we're going to change, first of all, you've got to have a President who really gives that issue a lot of his attention. The President has to have a Secretary of them suspected but hoped didn't exist. It's there and unless it's shored up or corrected I think detente is going to be a weakening, a continual erosion of our position in the world.

Baker: My own opinion is that detente is pretty much a one sided thing for the advantage of the Russians. I think it is not much more than how did Krushchev call it? Coexistence? Peaceful coexistence. I think it's that same kind of style rejuvenated in a different way. Part of the agreement we have, in the broad concept of detente, is that the Russian's should not use their agents to take over other countries. Yet it is a fact that the Cubans went in and took over Angola at the instigation of the Soviets. The same thing is happening in Lebanon. To me that's a one way street. In my reading of History, the thing Russians react to best is a firm position. That doesn't mean that you are going to go to war again, but it means that you have to have the will to resist. You have the ability to defend yourself and then you are respected in that very tough kind of international relationship.

Brennan: Detente is a relaxation of tensions, and it seems to me that a relaxation of tensions is desirable at all times. Whether there has been a shift in the burden of military hardware over the last several years because of it, I think is something that should be considered independent of the desirability of relaxing international tensions. I've always believed that the nations of the world have to learn to live together even though they don't agree with each other and so a relaxation of tensions is something I think that needs to be pursued.

Q: In 1936 the national debt was $33 billion. This fiscal year, the interest on the national debt was $33.4 billion. Should the national debt be reduced and, if so, how would you do it?

Huber: I think the theory that deficit financing is not all bad is disastrous. It might work except for one fundamental problem, and that is that under mounting inflation, which you're always going to have as long as you maintain a position of deficit financing, it wipes out anybody who has saved anything. People on fixed incomes are destroyed. I can remember when inflation was really tearing apart other nations, for instance Germany at the time when you had to pay workers twice a day. That situation is something we have to worry about if we do not reverse this policy and maintain balanced budgets and start a program of reducing our debt so that we have a soundness to the dollar.

Baker: In my judgement the government of the United States is out of control in a budgetary way. Congress really has no control of it. Paul McCracken, for one, says that the tax system is almost at the end of its ability to pay for the programs which exist now, without any new program, and the end result is inflation and financial collapse. When that happens is subjective -- whether it happens tomorrow or 10 years or 40 years from now, but I'm not persuaded that you can spend as we have. Out of the last 40 budgets, 36 of them have been deficits. You can't do that. I can't do it at home I can't do it at my business and the Government can't do it.

The answer is to get control of the government, control of the process. You've got to get where the money is. You've got to get hold of it. You've got to find those programs that can be eliminated. You've got to have the courage to not appropriate the money where it's not needed and maybe you've got to have the courage not to appropriate where it is needed.

Brennan: Fiscal irresponsibility it seems to me is one of the hallmarks of our modern federal government and one of the reasons for it is the fact that there has been a certain philosophical underpinning built up with the so-called Keynesian economics, with people who say that we owe it to ourselves, we don't have to worry about paying it back, the debt can be manipulated to regenerate activity in the economy, and so forth. If, I, as an individual, were to spend more than I make year in and year out, the time would come when I would either go bankrupt or I would die, in which case the state would probate it and my creditors would be out of luck. This doesn't happen to a government. Governments go on year in and year out and generation in and generation out and what happens is that the next generation of people have to pick up the tab. They have to pick up the tab in terms of interest; if not, in terms of ultimately paying off the national debt, which I understand now runs somewhere near $550 billion. In my judgment, continued deficit spending is immoral, it's wrong, it violates our constitutional principles.

The experience of other nations has been that when a nation is fiscally irresponsible, its money becomes worthless, and it does not stand behind its obligations, that in due course of time there is a civil war, there is upheaval, power is exchanged not in an orderly fashion, not through democratic means, but through undemocratic means and through force of arms. I don't believe that despite our grandiose traditions, that these things are not impossible even in America if we continue to tempt fate by the kind of proceedings that we have been following.

Esch: I think the major problem we have in the country is the fact that government is taking more money out of private sector. Any time you have the deficit increased up to $140 - 150 billion dollars like we've had in the last two years, that money is directly coming out of the private sector where it can be used for capital formation and that's number one.

I've worked on this problem a great deal because I'm leading the fight against the Humphrey - Hawkins bill. We're developing capital formation policies but we're also aiming to try to balance the budget by 1979. We're coming near that in that time frame and I think we have to set that as a major goal. What we need to do is to review all of the programs and agencies of the government over the next 4 - 5 years. We shouldn't be passing any new legislation. We should be going back in with more oversight, make a determination of what services we want from government, how we can get them more effectively more efficiently and then begin to move to balance that budget.

Q: What is an acceptable rate of inflation?

Baker: There is the economic theory that you can absorb some loss of your productivity. When you think of money and it's lending and use of money 3 percent is generally acceptable to the financial community.

They'll add three percent and they'll think it's a rational. We've probably learned that the world does not come to an end with an inflation rate in excess of three percent.

I think inflation is one of the great injustices of the last forty years -- the depreciation of currencies, the inflation of the dollar. I understand in this world we've had a whole stack of things that have caused inflation. And you can't control all of them. But that doesn't mean we like it and I think we should have the least possible inflation rate.

Brennan: How much flu can you tolerate? If you've got the flu, you want to get over it, you want to get all the way over it. You can live with a pretty bad case of the flu if you have to. My feeling on this inflation thing is that we have accepted in this country apparently, as an article of economic faith, that a certain amount of inflation is necessary if we are going to have an expanding economy.

I can't for the life of me see why, when you let new players into a poker game, you have to change the value of the chips. I think the dollar bill I have in my pocket says that it's legal tender for all debts public and private. It means just that and the government has the responsibility to stand behind the value of its currency. To permit that currency to change in its value from day to day and week to week and month to month means that the government is interfering with my private contracts with all the people I owe money to or who owe money to me and all the people I work for who owe me money and they are simply tampering with all these private contracts for what purpose I am not totally certain. It seems to me that there is an obligation, a responsibility, on the part of the government to issue stable currency and to stand behind it, so that people in their private lives can have a measure of value with which to incur public and private obligations and to discharge them. Zero inflation is the objective it seems to me and you work towards it as quickly as you can.

Huber: I think the only acceptable rate of inflation is zero. Nobody agrees on this. The spectrum in economics is so broad it depends on who you ask. I personally feel we ought to shoot for zero. I think that brings stability and solves the problems we have been having the past 25 years. I think it can be done. It certainly is offensive to the Keynesian philosophy, it certainly is offensive to the one worlders, it's certainly offensive to the socialists, but the system we have enjoyed for 200 years demands that. The people who are going to pay the brunt of that are the people on fixed incomes.

Q: What is an acceptable rate of unemployment?

Brennan: Unemployment essentially is a personal matter and I do not believe that it is appropriate for the government to determine how many people in the country are going to be employed or how many are not going to be employed at a certain minimal or determinative level.

I think it is unacceptable in this society for people who want to work and are unable to find gainful employment. I think that's unacceptable on a zero base. But it's very difficult to measure because now we are talking about what it would take to get somebody to want to go to work. Maybe somebody who is living adequately on their investments would be happy to go to work if he or she could find a $50,000 or $60,000 a year job. Might be enough to bring them out of retirement. So where do you draw the line, if it's a subjective test, where do you draw the line. I think that any person who is honestly interested in working ought to be able to find employment and ought to be able to provide for themselves through their own efforts.

Esch: If you really look at unemployment in the country in the last year or 14 months we have added 3 million new jobs. That's significant and that's in the private sector. I think what we have to do is find a way to create jobs in the private sector. We need to find what are the non-productive variables that we impose by the private sector that cause inflation and lack of jobs. What we ought to do is to give more predictability to industry to create jobs and we have proposed a 12 percent permanent tax investment tax credit, accelerated depreciation, especially in the areas of high employment, a removal of double taxation on dividends and your personal income tax, and that we take areas of high employment and allow for a 20 percent or $2,000 first year tax credit to anyone who will hire back unemployed workers.

Now if you really examine the unemployment today in the country it's at 7.3 percent nationally, but among young people it's 19 - 20 percent and our big cities it's 45-50-55 percent. So we think one area in which we really need work is in the area of youth employment. We would direct a major portion of our resources into a youth employment program which I proposed about a year ago.

Huber: If we had an agreement on exactly what is an unemployed person, we could control unemployment without too much problem. If it's someone who refuses to take a job because it's not the caliber of work to which they are accustomed, is that person really unemployed? That's part of the problem. Because of the attitude by the government towards people who are not working we're creating an impossible situation. We'll never eliminate unemployment as long as we don't establish criteria of what is unemployment, and I mean tough ones, not easy ones. The first thing the government ought to do to fight unemployment is stimulate the private sector, business. That isn't something that can be done by passing a single law. You do it by having an atmosphere and an attitude in Washington that recognizes that the private enterprise system produces the highest standard of living and ought to be encouraged, not discouraged. That means a lot of things. For instance changing some of the attempts to throw shackles on industry, at promoting featherbedding, at pushing the concept of subsidization, which in turns weakens the free enterprise and competitive spirit. We must change those kinds of attitudes which make it profitable to be unprofitable.

Baker: I don't think we get an honest measure of what unemployment is at this time. I have four children and the oldest is 23. She's, I'm sure, considered job hunting. She's a graduated student, part-time and she's helping me on the campaign. But you always have a legitimately jobless person. Again this is subjective judgement.

Q: What, if any, should the role of the federal government be in securing integrated housing?

Esch: Well, I think that we have to recognize that we should encourage the equal rights in terms of

of State who views that as a profoundly serious question and gives it a lot of his attention. Beneath the Secretary of State you've got to have an institutionalized State Department mechanism that's also giving that very concentrated, very sophisticated seven-day-a-week attention. Then you've got to have a counterpart capability in the Congress itself. Now one of the things that's the matter with the Congress is that the Congress really doesn't know very much about foreign affairs. Probably, less than 10 percent of the members of the House and Senate really devote serious time and attention to foreign policy issues and questions. The long and the short of it is that the Congress today really does not have the internal capability and sophistication to deal with foreign policy questions the way we should. And so there is an enormous building process that's got to go on in the Congress if we're going to upgrade the foreign policy capability of the Congress and thereby upgrade our dealings with the Russians.

Austin: I believe that each side would interpret the detente understanding to be one in which it gave up more than it should have given up. I think this is characteristic of agreements that are arrived at between nations especially where the main objective is to reduce tensions and to some extent restrict the freedom of each of the nations to build armaments. I feel we ought to continue to work to bring about harmony between nations so that it is unnecessary to carry on an armaments build up or build up of arms so that each will feel secure and safe in this world. It is inflationary too. I am not inclined to believe that the U.S. is necessarily operating at a disadvantage in these negotiations. I do not believe that the opposite number is operating at a disadvantage. I think that they have negotiated in good faith and accord.

Elsman: I think it's the man who's running for public office's duty to speak reality to the American people and not to be a demagogue. I think Ronald Reagan has been a demagogue on that issue because, when you analyze it, there is no choice. Detente, called by any name, is a necessity. Because the reality of it is that foreign policy goes on a course where detente is one branch of the road, and at the other branch is World War Three.

Now the form of that detente is the question Reagan did not really speak to. The form should be bargaining from strength, bargaining with our wheat, food, bargaining with our trade preferences, as with the Jackson amendment, but most importantly -- which Henry Kissinger has not perceived by his leadership -- is bargaining to convince the Soviet Union that the present course of the world is a course which can only lead to tragedy.

Q: In 1936 the national debt was $33 billion. This fiscal year, the interest on the national debt was $33.4 billion. Should the national debt be reduced and, if so, how would you do it?

Austin: Some of the best economic minds in the country have focused on this problem, and I do not mind adding my comments. The United States is a going concern and it is extremely difficult to assess the intangible assets of this nation. From a tangible asset point of view, we have a national debt. There is no question about it. I feel that we ought to have a policy which puts a ceiling on that debt and that ceiling should bear some relation to what we would regard as a solvency of this nation because to do otherwise would be to court runaway inflation and I would say economic disaster.

I am disturbed by the size of it, and one of the things I am interested in doing in going to Washington is to apply the skills that I have in my own professional background to the determination of not only what the national debt should be but what the economic policy of the country should be. I do have the background as what I consider to be an activist in tax policy, but I also have the background as a certified public accountant and a background in financial management in government. I have managed affairs of government at the state and local level, and this is the perspective which I would like to carry to Washington as a representative of the people.

Elsman: Let's avoid the question in the future by not having national debt. At least on a continuing basis. I would run government like I would run a business. A business is run to at least balance, and hopefully profit. Government has never quite picked up that concept. It is just not a simple tragedy of going further in debt; government doesn't understand that concept.

As a conservative Democrat, my answer is commitment to budget balancing and whatever that requires -- even if it requires tax increases -- I believe in fiscal responsibility and I'll tell the American people that. My preference is that we reduce the government spending so that we can exist on current tax revenues. The debt has gotten out of hand and the only question now is if we can stop additional debt from accruing and how do we pay off the past debt? We've got to start thinking about surpluses so that we can pay off that debt so that the debt is not so high per capita on the American citizen.

O'Hara: I think that the debt ought to be used as a one of the tools of an overall fiscal monetary policy. Whether or not the debt ought to be reduced or increased depends on your particular situation in a given economic situation in the given period of time. Although the debt is a great deal larger now in total dollars, as a percentage of the gross national product the debt is less than it was 30 years ago. I think that's true of myself. I owe a lot more money today than when I got out of law school. Of course I'm making more money than I did when I got out of law school. Maybe that's one of the reasons that I owe more. I think that the pure dollar size of a debt is not the most important thing, but it is true nonetheless that the debt ought to be a concern of public policy and it ought not to be permitted to grow much. We ought to, in times of economic prosperity, make efforts to reduce the debt. At this particular time when we're just coming out of a recession we ought to reduce the deficit, which we are doing. The projected deficit this year is about 2/3 of last year and I think next year if the economy continues to recover the deficit ought to be eliminated or very nearly so.

Riegle: Well I think we've essentially lost control of the financial management of the government. I think the increases in the national debt, in terms of their size, in terms of their frequency, poses some real jeopardy to the long run health of our economy generally.

Probably the biggest increase in the debt comes from the fact that we've mismanaged our economy. There is absolutely no excuse today for us to have unemployment in the country of 7.3 percent. Nothing is more costly to us in terms of increasing the deficit than high-level, long-term unemployment. For every 1 percent of unemployment in this country, we lose 14 billion dollars in tax revenues at the federal level, we end up paying over $2 billion in welfare and unemployment compensation payments, so right there you've got a swing of $16 billion -- $14 billion you didn't get and $2 billion you pay out -- plus there's a $50 billion loss in goods and services that aren't produced. Now in the last 3 years our economy has been operating somewhere between about 65-75 percent of plant capacity. For us to agree as a nation to run this economic system of ours between 65 and 75 percent plant capacity is so inefficient and so expensive and so inflationary that there is no justification for it whatsoever. The quickest way to eat into the deficit is to put people back to work, if we want to be serious about it. You've got really a stalemate in Washington. You get the Congress straining to get the economy going, you get the federal reserve system straining just as hard the other way to shut down a large part of the economy. What's happened as a result is that the economy gets stagnant and our economy has gotten very stagnant. Right now you're seeing a bit of a boom just before the election, but that's an administered boom in my judgment.

We can't continue to go on this way. We can't have one half of the government behaving in one way which absolutely offsets what the other half of the government thinks we ought to do. There's no state for which this is more important than our state because this state is in far more economic trouble than anyone wants to admit today or than I've seen printed in any newspaper in the state. We're going to have to have some regional economic strategies that can take and orchestrate the effect of national economic policy in such a way that it can have the desired effect region-by-region in the country. We don't have that kind of sensitivity built into our economic planning and strategy at the federal level, but we're going to have to build it in. We're talking about some very complicated things that we never take time to talk about and that's why we never solve them because we're dealing with them in sort of one and two sentence answers which aren't answers.

Q: What is an acceptable rate of inflation?

Elsman: How about zero? Obviously, if we're talking about acceptability, inflation is not acceptable, in a theoretical sense, because you have the reality of people living on fixed incomes in this country. We have the reality of reporters and editors living on incomes which may not be raised within the next year with a certainty, or lawyers, whose income may go up or may go down. So inflation per se is a bad thing, a disturbing factor in the economic environment.

O'Hara: I don't think there is such a thing as an acceptable rate of inflation or an acceptable rate of unemployment. The question should always be "are we doing everything within our capability to promote economic growth and pro-employment and stable prices?" Now the Humphrey - Hawkins bill costs about 3 percent adult unemployment and which works out to 4-4 1/2 percent unemployment within four years. A lot depends on other things that happen, not only here but around the world. Maybe in fact we could do better than that goal. I don't say there are acceptable rates of either. I just say that both the unemployment rate and the inflation rate are too damn high.

Riegle: Well, I'd like to get inflation down to as close to 0 as possible. I think inflation rate about 5 percent is unacceptable. We're talking about forcing into place changes in policy that can try to bring the inflation rate down below that effort, and your constant effort and pressure has to be to push it to 0 or as close to 0 as you can get.

The inflation problem must be attacked at its sources, an increase in the flow of capital to supply bottlenecks in the economy, wage-price guidelines arrived at through consultation with the President, labor and management, backed up by tough but fair executive branch jawboning, the management of education, in terms of employment, in terms of housing - that every individual should be treated equally in the country. To me that's the principal in which the country was founded and I strongly support that. I think that the question becomes how those are implemented and I am very much concerned that today the question is now becoming one of using unequal rights to bring about equality. In housing, I think that a person should be allowed to own a home anywhere in any community where they are financially capable of owning and I think there can be programs to increase housing opportunities for individuals. But saying that we are not going to give you any funds for your own community development unless you place X houses here - I reject that idea.

I think you have to recognize that the question in housing is an economic question as much as it is a racial question. It goes right back down to the question of whether people are going to be trained to become contributing members of our society and in turn receive compensation for that training and in turn be upgraded.

Huber: Wherever we are using force to promote integration I think it's a mistake. Two wrongs never make a right. Wherever we use the law for segregation that's illegal, obviously. But to go the other side of the coin and use the government power to force integration, I think that's a mistake.

Baker: Integrated housing? I work very hard in the urban league. I have worked in building housing. I recognize the tragedy of a society that is unequal in opportunity. On the other hand, I in the strongest possible way am against forced busing of people, against forced integration.

I don't think it's the government's business to force an integrated society. I think in the long term this society has to develop a solution to the mixing of the roles in an economic sense in mixing of the diverse element of society into society. You can't let somebody grow up in the ghetto and keep them there. It's neither right nor is it in the long term a fair or practical or a good thing to do. How you do it, how you allow this evolutionary process to take place is I think first to have fair opportunities for people to be educated so they can move and have some ability in this society.

Q: What should the role of government be in busing to integrate schools?

Huber: I'm opposed to that. Unless you are a knowledgeable person you don't know who the fakers are on the busing issue. There are many of them down there in Washington, who know how to be on both sides of that issue, and you can very effectively be on both sides of that issue. The one way you can tell on the busing issue who believes in busing and who doesn't is those who support a constitutional amendment. If you are a fighter against busing, really opposed to it, you are working for a constitutional amendment. If you are not on a constitutional amendment, either introducing one, supporting one or working for one, then really you have accepted the principle of forced busing. Really, that's how you tell. I would never stop pushing for a constitutional amendment, because that's the only way you're going to stop it.

Brennan: The original basis for so-called busing orders, by the Federal Courts, had to do with an attempt on the part of the courts to undo what had been done by law in the southern states, where they had black and white drinking fountains, black and white toilets, black and white schools, and the children obligated to go to those schools by law. Where those situations existed and where they were eliminated by force of Supreme Court decisions, the courts undertook to attempt to unsegregate, or desegregate, the conditions that they found and they began to require school busses to be used for this purpose.

In the North we never had those laws. We had housing patterns that were described by some as de facto segregation and which were found by some federal judges. I think quite erroneously, to be the result of a series of decisions that were made by school boards and school administrators. The fact is that in every major metropolitan community, perhaps since the dawn of history, people of similar ethnic and religious, social disposition have migrated to certain parts of the major metropolitan areas. I think it substantially demeans and insults the black people of our country to tell them that they do not have the right or any appropriate desire to want to associate with themselves or with each other, that somehow or other their association is on a different plane than the process of self-association that we have seen in so many other ethnic minorities. There is no way to have racial quotas in the schools or in the neighborhoods without counting racial noses. In effect, what the courts are doing is discriminating on the basis of race, color or creed in the assignment of students to schools and to classrooms for the purpose of carrying out what they conceive to be a desirable social policy, an educational policy.

Esch: Busing doesn't make any sense at all from the stand point of education. As an educator, I know. All the educational research says busing doesn't train our children any better than other programs and what we really ought to be providing is quality teaching for our children.

Now it also doesn't make any sense socially. Because taking children from one neighborhood where there is a deprived neighborhood and moving them out to an area that is not deprived for 30 hours a week then moving them back in and having them live there for 148 hours a week doesn't make sense.

Q: What, if any, should the role of the federal government be in enacting land use legislation?

Baker: What I see and what it should do I don't think are the same. What you will see probably is an increased emphasis on use of land by the federal establishment -- everything from coal mining to plating of new housing developments. This is a kind of thing that I think is best left to the local level. Federalization of land use would be very inhibiting on the orderly development of those aspects of the society that could be developed. I'm talking about industrial growth, new factories, new housing developments, new recreational developments.

Brennan: I don't think land use legislation is appropriate in federal jurisdiction under our present constitution. Land use legislation has historically been part of the sovereignty of the states and it should remain so.

Esch: The proper use of the federal government is to provide the services which the local units request and the federal government can provide more effectively than state and local units. A good example of that is the earth resources satellite that I worked on that flies over the state of Michigan every 17 days at 500 miles and takes infrared, remote sensing photography. A local unit can't provide that service. The ultimate decision on land use has to be local. The state can be there to coordinate. I don't have any question about the role of a state government coordinating with the local units but the ultimate decision is with county and city.

Huber: I don't like to restrict land use completely by a long ways, but I don't think carte blanche is the answer, either. As a mayor I saw the ability of government to control zoning. I saw by us in Troy being willing and able to go to the Supreme Court to fight for the right to zone, we were able to make Troy a model city in terms of a place to live, the environment, growth patterns, everything. We planned that city under my administration for the year 2000 and we were willing to fight to protect the rights of the people, not just the individual property owner. But I think there's a way to do it without saying, well, we're going to decide in Washington where you're going to zone. We were keeping things at the local level. We had controls. But today with the idea of one big Uncle Sam who knows how best to zone Okemos or something, I don't buy that.

Q: How adequate do you feel our current national defense posture is? Do you support the Helsinki accord? Have the SALT Talks been productive?

Brennan: First of all, it's my thinking that the defense of the United States of America is best assured by fundamental strength of the nation. I am not persuaded that military hardware, standing alone, is the measure of our defense capability. I think our potential for defending ourselves is more the really important consideration. I think we have had some lessons to learn from the Viet Nam experience. One of them is that the people of the country are not behind a military endeavor, that it is not going to succeed and that it is very difficult to purchase a fighting force in order to succeed in a military venture unless the people of the country are fairly behind it. As far as the level of expenditures for national defense, I would have no way of knowing at the outset whether it is too high or too low or whatever.

On the Helsinki Accords, I hesitate to express a detailed opinion with respect to them because I have only the most superficial understanding of precisely what they involve. There were some general expressions, as I recall, having to do with the status of some European nations, eastern European nations, and I think to the extent that there was recognition of reality, they may well have been pragmatically desirable. But as I say, I am going to have to pass giving any comment on that.

Strategic arms limitations talks have been going on for a very, very long time. I believe they should be pursued. Whether there have been any recent breakthroughs, I am not in a position to express an opinion. It seems to me that I read many, many times about supposed great breakthroughs in the SALT talks and they are still going on. I would endorse the idea of continuing the talks.

Esch: Congress, both in the House and Senate, has to oversee the defense budget the way you see any other budget. When there's fat in the defense budget why we ought to cut back on that defense budget the same as anywhere else. I've always voted for a lean defense budget. But I think you ought to recognize that there are conflicting ideologies in the world and we're going to have to maintain our strength as a first class power in order to maintain our selves politically and economically in the world. For example, I am a strong supporter of the B1 Bomber and I believe you need that. I'm a strong supporter of the Trident Submarine.

We can not have a foreign policy based on large masses of troops overseas anymore, economically and militarily. Instead, we have to develop a military system that has the capability to retaliate from other places in a longer range. The real legacy of Vietnam for example if you talk militarily is that so much of our resources were put into Vietnam. One of the legacies of Vietnam is that we've let our Naval forces go so we're about 4 to 5 years behind in the development of our Naval forces.

I think that what is most frightening to me about agribusiness so as to avoid violent swings in prices and shortages that result from selling more abroad than we have available, positive action to try to break the OPEC cartel so as to put an end to the artificial contraction of energy supplies and the continual upward escalation of prices, affirmative action to forestall the establishment of little OPEC's to reduce supply and inflate the prices of other critical raw material resources. I saw a list the other day of about 25 strategic resources that we need the same way we need oil, where principally it's a foreign source situation and we're going to be facing OPEC situations in a number of other critical resource areas fairly soon. That's a huge problem that's out in front of us, just given the way our economy is shaped. Finally the implementation and formulation of a new foreign economic policy which is coherent and rational and can be understood by businessmen, farmers and laborers so as to insure all Americans of the raw materials, the markets and the job opportunities needed for a full employment economy.

Austin: An acceptable rate of inflation? I would not specify any rate of inflation as an acceptable rate. The target, of course, should be zero, but our practical experience tells us that it cannot be zero. So what we do is tolerate whatever has to be tolerated under the circumstances with our policy being to maintain as low a rate as possible and possibly zero.

Q: What is an acceptable rate of unemployment?

Riegle: I've got to split it in two pieces. I'd split it at the 4 percent level -- 4 to 4½ percent level -- and below that level we are talking about structural unemployment, which is a very different problem than we're dealing with above that line up to 7.3 percent where we say we are now. Those are employable people who we need to have at work if the economy is functioning properly. I think we should set for ourselves the goal of getting down in the area of the structural unemployment level, which is the 4-4½ percent level. There is a tremendous pent-up desire in the private economy now to get rolling. I think it's just straining at the bit, and if it gets a half a chance, if monetary policies and fiscal policies would let it go, I think you'll see an awful lot of rehiring. We could get the unemployment rate down to the 4-5 percent level relatively quickly. How we work below that level is a much, much tougher problem. I really believe in the work ethic and I think everybody in the country that's able-bodied ought to be working. I said that in my announcement statement back in October and I believe it just as strongly today. But how we tackle the problem of say 25 percent unemployment among young people in Detroit, we don't have the answer to right now. I don't know anyone who has an answer to that problem right now and I don't know that we're going to have an answer to it until we start to work our way through it.

Austin: I would not want to specify an acceptable rate of unemployment because an acceptable national rate of unemployment translates in many communities to an intolerable rate. For example, here in our nation today we have an unemployment rate of approximately 7½ percent. In Michigan that is 10 percent. And in a metropolitan area like Detroit it is higher than that. In the inner city of Detroit among youth it is as high as 50 percent. I do feel that Congress should have a target to which it ought to try to reduce unemployment perhaps a percentage of 3 percent, as suggested in the Humphrey-Hawkins bill. We can argue pro and con on a 3 percent rate. That is a good target considering the fact that we now have 7½ percent, and I would be willing to go along with a target like that to be achieved over a period of 4 or 5 years. That does not necessarily mean that I feel we have a society that ought to tolerate 3 percent. But we ought to have a target, and a 3 percent target is not a bad target.

Elsman: I think that the Humphrey-Hawkins level of 3 percent is a fair one. I think that the Humphrey-Hawkins principle of the right to a job for every American is acceptable. Beyond that I part company with my Democrats because a built-in assumption and provision of Humphrey-Hawkins bill is that the government is going to play a very large role in public sector employment. I object to that. For example, the problems and consequences of employing 4 million people. If you price-tag each of those 4 million jobs at $20,000, which is not unreasonable, even if these guys are sweeping streets you build in your bureaucrats to supervise them, figure $20,000 a job. You are talking about $80 billion on a budget which this year ran $70 billion deficit. If you can't afford a program, I say don't do it.

Q: What, if any, should the role of the federal government be in securing integrated housing?

Austin: In regard to housing, again, unemployment contributes materially to difficulties in resolving our housing problem in this country. As long as people are not gainfully employed they are unable to purchase housing that might be made available even with government assistance. So I want to be sure that we understand that this unemployment problem is pervasive even in our discussion of housing.

The housing has to be made available on an equal opportunity basis. It could not be otherwise if tax dollars are in anyway offered to encourage the development of housing. I feel that local units of government should have the power to determine their own restrictions and the types of housing they would like to have in their community, this is a matter of self determination. But, housing opportunities should be made available to people from all up and down the economic spectrum and they certainly should not be denied on the basis of race or any other identification should not be a factor.

I am distressed by any community establishing barriers which deny to people of any identification whether it be low income or race, religion, the opportunity to equal housing in the area, but I do feel that local units should have the right of determination. Of course, they suffer in the process and if they are willing to suffer whatever detriments they suffer as a result of it, that's the privilege of the local government. But I certainly would not want to encourage it.

Elsman: I think that there is some assistance that the government can give in this area, but I don't think we should fool ourselves that this is going to happen quick -- a full integrated society. I think perhaps, we have to stop red-lining in terms of mortgage lending. I think there should be leadership by both members of the white and black community to encourage integrated living -- living where you want to. I think lastly that a great deal of this problem has to do with the failure of our society to have full employment, because if you do not have full employment, you do not have income in the hands of people, which logically can be spent on housing, to live where they can afford to live. If integrated housing is the key to the problem, which it is, we have a segregated society, de facto, in the north, we simply must have everybody to work so that when they get their check and make their savings, they can live where they want to live. If they work in a Ford plant in Novi, they can live in Novi if they're black. I completely support that. I disavow any type of racist votes.

O'Hara: I think the federal government's role is to prohibit discrimination in housing. I don't think there ought be legally sanctioned discrimination against any citizen because of their race, color. And I think it is in the interest of the country to have an integrated society, but I do not favor coercive methods of achieving that. We run into a situation where we're confusing ends with means and we've been saying well if the end is a desirable one, a constitutional one, a moral one then any old means for getting there is okay. Any stick to beat a dog. Well I don't agree with that.

I think that means are all important and I don't think that we ought to be achieving school integration by deciding what school a child attends on the basis of their skin color. I don't think we ought to be deciding housing issues by saying all right community you go out and recruit as indeed the city of Warren was told for all practical reasons you go out and recruit blacks to live in your town. I don't think that is any constitutional or legal basis for that. I agree completely with saying to the city of Warren, "Look Warren, you may not in any way directly or indirectly prevent or discourage blacks from living in your town." But this whole notion of the way in which affirmative action coupled with goals and quotas works has gotten us into a business where it sometimes has been described as a reverse discrimination.

Riegle: We passed a Federal Open Housing Legislation in 1967, to ensure that a person would not be denied the right to buy a home based on race. I supported that legislation and voted for it. That was a major policy statement by the country that said that we think people ought not to be denied the right to live somewhere because of factors of race. If you're really going to try to deepen people's faith in the country, life has to be able to get better for people. A critical part of that is housing; to be able to have a house, to be able to raise your family; to be able to have good educational opportunities for your children; to be able to have older people live decently and so forth. I would like to see us facilitate in some fashion the ability for people to buy houses, to upgrade their housing situation.

Now what that would do in terms of breaking down the racial isolation that is built up in our society -- it would obviously have some effect along that line. How much, you know, I don't know how to evaluate because there is still a lot of preference in housing in terms of where people decide to move. I think that if people could afford to buy houses moreso than they can today, if more people were working, that you would see our society integrate itself more than it has been able to do under present conditions.

Q: What should the role of government be in busing to integrate schools?

Elsman: I am the only Democratic candidate to say unequivocally that I favor a constitutional amendment to prevent forced busing. Once you say that busing is an improper solution, you have to explain it because we do have a problem in our society with integration of our last great minority, the blacks. The explanation is that busing has been a failure. It has not created an integrated society; it has caused white flight in the state of Michigan, as we can observe in the city of Detroit. It has not created quality education, but indeed it has caused disruption in the schools and disruption detracts from quality education.

Now, after you have explained your strong stand against busing, I think you have to speak to this issue of an integrated society. After all, this is America; it's not a land where racism is proper.

I think the solution to that problem is a Jesse Jackson type solution, which is based upon an appeal to black pride. I do not think you can manipulate the human being. Busing is an attempt to manipulate people from an outside force. Whether you are raising children, or whatever relationships you have with people, I think the person whose behavior we want to change, has to come to that conclusion themselves. Jesse Jackson has told us, black minister that he is, that the answer to the black problem of the inner cities is black pride.

O'Hara: I've proposed a Constitutional amendment which says that nothing in the Constitution shall require busing in any school system that assigns students to schools on the basis of racially non-discriminatory geographic attendance areas. Of course I think courts ought to retreat on busing. I think the easiest way to cure that problem is to cure the problems that led to it. And the big mistake was made when the court in several cases said "Well, the segregation was wrong and it was achieved by official action and therefore you must stop segregating -- that's okay up to that point -- you must stop discriminating and furthermore you must adopt a method that will actually result in integration." Well that's where they got off base. It seems to me that all they could and should have required was that there be no discrimination.

Riegle: I really think wide scale busing programs are a mistake. I don't think they are working to accomplish the goals that we want to see accomplished. I see those as two: (1) how to provide a high-quality education for every youngster and (2) how do you also have the maximum amount of racial integration in your school system that you can reasonably hope to accomplish. I think there are a number of alternatives that are better ones than busing.

Austin: My only view is that to date busing has not been an important issue in the campaign. It is an

the SALT talks is our failure to understand the Cruise Missile and its implications. Most of the SALT talks have been governed on the basis of super sonic missiles. The Cruise Missile has the capability of being undetected by radar - flying a range of up to 2-3,000 miles, has a capability of accuracy within 100 and 150 feet, could be launched from an aircraft, could be launched from Navy vessels, could be launched from planes. We have not negotiated on the Cruise Missile and we have to have a crash program just out of self protection.

Huber: I think we have weakened ourselves. I am more concerned with the attitude of the public, which is one of complacency and disinterest at this point. It's a classic case of isolationism. If our nation believes in the preservation of peace in the world and believes that we must have it, it must take the time to study when were the times of peace and recognize that we must be a strong nation in order to preserve peace. If we are prepared for trouble we won't have it. You know if we had had a strong army and navy and air force the Japanese would never have attacked Pearl Harbor. But they knew we were weak.

I think we effectively said to the captive nations the American government will not support you or your continued attempts at survival. I think we wanted to placate the Russians and so we recognized the boundaries. Maybe it was realistic in terms of the American as an individual no longer maintaining his great concern for the rest of the world. It was a little bit inconsistent to pass the Jackson amendment on the one hand and not worry about the freedom of the captive nations. I think we ought to realize that every agreement is subject to 24 hour renegotiation by the Russians. They'll live up to any agreement until the minute they decide it's advantageous not to. As long as we understand that, I suppose, it's advantageous to continue talking.

Baker: I think you have to talk. I think you have to try to expand the relationship between the Soviet Union and China. I think that is a very necessary part of our existence. I think it has to be above the level of having a dance team come over here and cultural events. There has to be significant give and take on both sides.

One of the things that concern me is the agreement that the group of nations known as the captive nations were in effect accepted, or their condition was accepted. I think that was wrong. I think that we should always hold out hope to those countries who are under the yolk of communism that there is somewhere, sometime an alternative to that.

I think there has been a need to limit armaments, to limit nuclear armaments. I read just a day or two ago that in deed the Russians had not completely dismantled their silos. Well, that was part of the agreement that they would be dismantled. They weren't dismantled. I am not yet prepared to put full faith and credit in the Soviet word.

Q: Has our all-volunteer army become too expensive or should we continue it?

Esch: I'm a supporter of the all volunteer army and I believe in it and I think that in times of peace time it serves the country well. I think that I'm willing to pay a price for that. The only other alternative which the country isn't ready for at the present time would be at age 18, a one year universal draft, but the country is not ready for that now.

Huber: The draft system is just totally unacceptable to the American public, whether you believe in it or not. I personally believe each citizen of this country has an obligation to this country. Now, the draft has become completely unacceptable, so I don't think it's realistic to talk about going back to it presently. I would not support reinstatement of the draft now because I think we are a government of people, by people and for people and the people in the United States are opposed to the draft.

Baker: I think you will probably have a military draft again within the next ten years, assuming that there is a growing economy. The alternative of military service is not the most desirable one and I think it will probably be necessary to reinstate the draft at some point, if you expect to maintain the defense establishment.

Brennan: I'm not completely happy with a volunteer army because I perceive that what we have now is not so much a volunteer army as it is a mercenary army. I simply do not believe that long-range defense of a nation is to be assured by a military force comprised basically of people who are professional fighters. What we need in this country is a citizen army. Please understand that I am saying at the outset that we need a professional leadership in the military. In terms of the foot soldiers and the draft of numbers of people serving in the military, it seems to me that we ought to rely on a citizen army. Now what does that mean? Does it mean I'm for conscription? Absolutely not. I believe that what we need to do is to develop a means whereby citizens will choose to serve a period of time in the military. Voluntarily. Not as career military personnel. How would I achieve this? I would expand and improve on the peacetime GI bill. I would try to make it a practice for young men and women, too, to serve for a period of time in the military service in exchange for a full ride scholarship to college. I think that that could be made attractive, we would attract into the military, for a temporary period, the potential leaders of the nation and we would always have, at any moment in time, people who have, who represent, really the cream of our manhood and would be a fighting force that we could rely on when we needed them.

Q: Should Project Seafarer be built? Should it be built in Michigan?

Huber: If the U.P. is the only place and it's a question of the security of the United States then that's it. But that is not the question and as far as I can see now that's dead up there. Unless they said this is the only place you can put it - the only, not the best or the cheapest, but the only place - then it's a question of how much additional are you willing to pay to put it somewhere else. The only reason I would overrule the rights of the people themselves to make a decision would be if it involved the security of our country. That case hasn't been presented to me and I don't think it will be. I would be prepared to do whatever was necessary to insure the security of the United States at any given time but I'm not going to play screw around with the people.

Baker: If it is absolutely necessary for the defense of the United States it should be wherever it has to be. If it has to be in the U.P. that's where it should be.

I am dismayed at the continued difference in some of the stories one hears from the naval sources themselves. I think that they have done a very inept job in presenting the matter to the people of the Upper Peninsula.

The purpose of it is to allow the submarine to operate in a more protected depth, to allow a more wider, better dispersal of the submarine force of this country, which is really the strongest deterrent - maybe even stronger than our own silos - I think the real defense of this country, the thing the Russian's fear the most, is the submarine force and I think that's got to be operated at the best degree of efficiency.

Brennan: Right now I am not persuaded that we need to have it. I heard that it has some very unhappy environmental effects, or may have, and that there are some studies that have been made that point in that direction.

Esch: One of the problems we have had with Seafarer is that we have had too much public information on it prior to the analysis and right now we know that the Navy is going in with an environmental study and a cost study that should have been done before the public discussion. They've asked the National Academy of Science and other objective groups to study if there are any harmful environmental facts. Seafarer probably represents a case in which there was too much early on decision made prior to Congress objectively studying it.

Reasonable men can disagree on this and there are three questions: (1) Is it necessary for the defense of the country and there is more and more evidence coming out that it probably is (2) Is it environmentally harmful? We don't have the total answer on that and quite frankly we should have had that answer earlier than what we've had and (3) Should it be built where there is the least danger to the environment and should the people have any decision making power?

Q: How do we cut our dependence on foreign oil?

Baker: I think the energy policy of this country is a failure. I really don't think there has been very much done to improve our position. At the time of the first boycott the formation we were importing what 30 or 33 percent of our oil and recently we were importing 50 percent of our oil.

The solution is a combination: a reduction of the use of fuel for industry use, gas for heating for example. A maximizing the use of the coal reserves. There are tremendous large coal reserves in our nation. After you use those you have to use other energy. There has to be a way to expand nuclear energy, there has to be emphasis on a whole series of experiments such as solar heat. Immediate alternatives are use of coal, use of nuclear power and development of our own reserves.

Brennan: I am not at all that certain that that's an ultimate objective. I think that the nations of the world all have their particular advantages and disadvantages and strengths and weaknesses and resources of one kind or another, and I don't see it as a terribly evil thing that we have to import some oil. I think that all the nations of the world should be a little concerned about burning up all of our common resources, but I think that, except to the extent that it affects national defense, that some dependency on foreign oil is necessarily a bad thing.

We may just have to get used to the idea that we don't have all the oil deposits in the world within our territorial jurisdiction. There is some question in my mind whether it is desirable to use up all the oil that we have. I suppose, perhaps, in the context of national defense, that it may be wiser to import oil during times of peace and save our own resources in case we are put in some kind of an emergency situation. Really I think that the whole objective of oil independence needs to be carefully considered before it becomes an automatic national policy.

Esch: We do what we should have done two years ago. We should start by de-regulating gas and oil and by developing a plow back mechanism in our tax structure that would allow and encourage the development of our resources domestically. There are various schemes developed, for example a 90 percent plow back feature that encourages for five years the oil companies here to develop our own resources coupled with deregulation in using the elasticity in the market place is the answer.

Huber: We can encourage exploration today. If we encourage exploration maybe we'll get some more things going for us and find some new sources. Then we might do it. But if we don't do it, no. How do you cut usage? Who's going to give up his car? Are you going to give up yours? Not if you can vote you won't, because you'd vote me out of office if I suggested you give up your car. Are you going to go to rationing? We may have to come to that. We've been able to solve energy problems in the past, but it was under a climate that promotes, not makes it unattractive to solve that problem.

Q: Should we continue to build nuclear power plants? What are the short and long range alternatives?

Brennan: I believe we should go slowly. I don't think we should expose mankind to unnecessary dangers. On the other hand, I believe that we have to progress, too. I really don't know; it seems to me that the development of nuclear energy needs to be - we shouldn't shut it down, but we should move with caution.

I think that there are some natural sources of energy that we should really begin to look at, that it issue that is raised from time to time and it is highly emotional among some people, but thus far in this campaign I have not seen it as an issue which is creating any problems for any of the candidates. I think the main reason why it has not been a major issue in this campaign is because there really isn't a great deal of difference between candidates on the issue. I think most of us have reservations about busing as a way of solving the desegregation problem. We would like to see some alternatives, and if busing is resorted to it should be the last resort. It's unpopular with parents and with students. It's costly, and it tends to generate tensions within communities. I don't believe that this is proper subject matter for the United States Constitution and I would be opposed to a constitutional amendment which would restrict the court's authority to not only hear the complaints of people who feel aggrieved but also to propose various solutions for solving the problem of desegregation or segregation once they feel there is a segregated pattern that would somehow involve the governments.

Q: How adequate do you feel our current national defense posture is? Do you support the Helsinki accord? Have the SALT Talks been productive?

O'Hara: I support a strong national defense. I've never supported the B1 bomber. Instead, I support a modified B52 using the Cruise missile. That would be a much more economical and more effective way to go.

I think the Helsinki agreement was a very bad idea. It proves we have been looking for a situation where eastern Europe would be stabilized by recognizing the Soviet domination in that area. I tend to be rather suspicious of the SALT agreements. Senator Henry Jackson has a pretty good grasp of what's been going on. I'm not an expert on the SALT agreements but I tend to agree with the Jackson view, which is that we have not adequately protected the U.S. interests in the SALT negotiations.

Riegle: We need a strong national defense capability. I think the real question is how do you strike a balance between military hardware, combat readiness and strength at home, because our resources are not infinite. We are going to have to conserve our resources much more than we have, because we are spending ourselves into a situation that we can't afford. So there are some very hard trade-offs that are going to have to be made. I think today that we are stronger than we need to be in defense capability and we are weaker than we can afford to be at home. The centerpiece of any national defense capability has to be that you're strong at home; you have to have the people unified, consolidated, the country has got to be at work, people have to feel right about their government, to feel right about the whole set of national purposes, and then I think that you have a capacity and a strength to conduct a foreign policy.

We have such a profound strategic capability, nuclear weapons capability, that I don't think there are probably 500 people in the country that really spending no more dollars on armaments on defense than absolutely necessary. I am one who believes that, yes, there is probably some water in the defense budget that could be squeezed out, and I would be one of those who would work toward that objective.

Elsman: I support a very strong national defense to accomplish the maximum in a bargaining posture with the Soviet Union. I support the 10 percent budget cut applied to national defense as well. I think there's fat there. Whether you find it in exclusive officer's clubs or other type of excessive spending, I know it's there. I want it out so that we can have the most efficient defense service as possible.

In terms of the Helsinki Accords, no, I do not support that Accord. I think it was a continuation of a sell-out of the traditionally great countries of eastern Europe. We started that tradition when we allowed the Russians to take over Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia and I don't think we shall ever be forgiven for that or for the Helsinki Accords.

I favor SALT talks and I favor not so much the result whereby the Russians and the United States can go ahead proving their superiority to all other nations of the earth, but a system whereby human beings can have some hope that self-interest will prevail and that we will end armament by all the parties that are escalating their armaments. I don't see that in the SALT talks so far. I basically see a deal between Russia and the United States to perpetuate their dominance.

Q: Should Project Seafarer be built? Should it be built in Michigan?

Riegle: I've studied this case carefully and I'm not convinced in my own mind that either of two tests have been met - number one that the system is absolutely essential to the national interest and secondly that this is the only place it could go or the best place it could go. I'm very interested in the history of this project. Initially, Michigan was not the prime site for this. There were other areas of the country that were considered before we were considered and it's not altogether clear how they were ruled out.

I have a very strong suspicion, for example, that the reason it was not put in Wisconsin was due to the intervention of Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird, who apparently was not wildly enthusiastic about having it in Wisconsin. I'm concerned about the question of whether or not Michigan is really the place where a system of that kind - we're it absolutely essential and vital to our security - is really the best place to put it or is this simply the last resort because some other places that were considered first have successfully lobbied to push it off on somewhere else.

Elsman: I'm against Project Seafarer in the Upper Peninsula because the government does not carry the environmental objection argument and it's their burden to prove that there is no adverse environmental effect anytime they propose something. Should Seafarer be built? I don't know yet. I know there are contentions that it is essential to our National Security and I tend to go along with those contentions. But since the proposal has not been made ad to building it in a certain location, I haven't had to analyze the whole issue yet.

O'Hara: In the first place I think there are two questions involved. One of them is the military necessity question and secondly is the whole issue on environmental and health damage. With respect with the first issue I don't much quarrel with the notion of military necessity. Based on the information I have right now it would appear that it would definitely be advantageous for us to have a low frequency communication grid of the type proposed first in SANGUINE and SEAFARER. Second, in respect to environmental questions, it isn't entirely clear to me whether or not environmental damage and health hazards would occur. It seems to be that we ought to, before we proceed, determine whether or not there would be substantial environmental damage or health hazards. And if we find there would not be any substantial damage to environmental or health we ought to go ahead with it.

Q: How do we cut our dependence on foreign oil?

Elsman: We've got coal coming out our ears if we'd only use it. Secondly, my whole approach of incentives would lead me to recommend higher production of domestic oil. Thirdly, my approach would be to have the government analyze if indeed domestic producers have been withholding resources, oil and gas, from the American market in hopes of achieving a better deal in Washington or higher prices. Fourthly, I think that we have to enter into commercial relations with the Arab nations and the other nations of OPEC which would make it against their self interests to cut us off, or do the other things, raising the prices, or whatever, that makes foreign oil so dangerous to our economy.

O'Hara: I'm not sure that we want to necessarily cut our dependence on non-domestic oil. We want to create world market conditions where by the sellers, the OPEC cartel, won't have us by the throat the way they do and that's the point of increasing our domestic oil supply. There are several ways you go about that: Number one is you try to make a better use of your energy resources than we have. You try conservation, you try using other kinds of more plentiful fossil fuels where that's appropriate, you substitute coal for oil in a number of industrial applications, you try to develop non-petroleum energy sources, nuclear, geo-thermal, solar the whole bit and finally in terms of your immediate demands for petroleum you try to get it pressured up there on the market, you try to encourage exploration and development of oil resources outside of the OPEC nations, you try to do your bidding for your foreign oil in ways that put greater pressure on the sellers. I for one am in favor of the creation of a trade corporation for acquiring our foreign oil needs in which we would go out and try to make it a buyer's market instead of a seller's market. Right now it's completely a seller's market.

I favor a breakup at the big oil companies over a period of time. I want to have a smooth transition, but I don't think that the oil companies ought to be as they are today. In the United States the oil companies own about 45 percent of the nation's coal reserves, they own over half of the nation's uranium reserves. The major oil companies engage in every phase of the operation from exploration to drilling to understand what our capacity is in this area. One Trident Submarine could effectively wipe out any three countries in the world simultaneously. The amount of overkill that we have at the strategic weapons level is almost beyond your imagination. I think it's more than we need, frankly.

I tend to come out on the side of the argument that says rather than adding to the strategic weapons arsenal that naval strength is something that has multiple purposes to us. We are a trading nation, being able to operate on the seas is crucial to our economic, strategic economic interests, which directly relate to our military interests, and I would put myself more emphasis in the area of making sure that we really have the capacity to travel the seas under virtually every set of circumstances, than to continue to build more missiles and more nuclear warheads.

Austin: One of the problems of national defense is that the advance of technology and science has been such that communication and transportation systems have just about destroyed boundaries. So when we talk defense, we can't now just talk about defending certain boundaries which puts us in an altogether different situation than we were in when this nation was first founded. It is extremely difficult to define the boundaries that we ought to be trying to protect in our defense program. I think our very best line of defense is to work to reduce tensions in the world, work for peace wherever we can to reduce the need as I have said earlier for an arms build up to make us feel secure.

A defense program includes a variety of objectives. One, of course, is aiding nations, friendly nations, to maintain their security and safety, helping to make it possible for American industry, American farmers to sell their products around the world, make it possible for us to buy from other nations for the products we want, to promote and encourage the development of governments that are representative of the people so that we are doing business with nations whose philosophies of government are in harmony with ours. I think these are the overall objectives of our not only foreign policy, but our efforts at defense. Now in the process there is a great deal of experimentation in our defense effort and I think that Congress has a responsibility to examine and to reexamine the defense budget and make absolutely sure that obsolete programs are discontinued, that waste in the defense budget is squeezed out, and that we are is very appropriate for the federal government to put the kind of effort into solar energy and harnessing the power of the tides. I look right here in the state of Michigan at the damage that Lake Huron has done to the shore up around Tawas. And I can't believe with all the technology in the world, that there isn't some way to harness some of that energy. It's there, it's constant and it's enormous. I am also apt to believe that one of the sources of energy that hasn't much been tapped in this country as of late unfortunately is one of human energy. People are getting to the point now where they have got to have electric toothbrushes and then they have to go out to Vic Tanny and sit in a chair and move their legs as fast as they can to keep their heart going. It doesn't make any sense to me and I think that we ought to take a look at little uses of human energy.

Esch: I have been concerned about the environmental hazards of nuclear plants for about the

Q: What is your position on gun control?

Esch: Well, I think the gun control legislation we ought to have is mandatory sentences for anyone having a gun caught committing a crime. I believe we ought to enforce the gun control legislation we have now; we don't need any more.

Huber: I was trained in the Army as an ordnance officer. That was my specialty, - ammunition. I have a couple of pistols and a shotgun, a carbine and I've even got an old flintlock musket from 1796. I think the Constitution is pretty specific on this issue. I think the right of a citizen to have and bear arms is what it says. I personally am opposed to Saturday night specials.

Baker: I believe that the second amendment to the constitution was written for specific purposes.

Brennan: I believe that the constitutional right to bear arms has still some force in our society and it last 2 years and I don't think that within the old AEC there was sufficient capability to examine potential environmental hazard. I think that starting within the last 6 to 9 months they have developed more of a concern in this area; I think they are moving ahead in it. My own personal feeling is that we haven't spent sufficient funds on such things as laser fusion, which I think has more potential and is more environmentally acceptable. But my answer to you is that I have early on felt that they have not given enough attention to that area and voted accordingly. I think that they are now beginning to move ahead more aggressively and examine the hazards.

Huber: It's inevitable that they'll continue to be built. If we had unlimited oil and it was being rained down from heaven and we could collect it in reservoirs then you wouldn't need them. But because of the present shortages I think we have to look at every kind of energy source available to us. Right now nuclear's a good source. I don't know if anybody who's been blown to bits in a nuclear power plant explosion.

to Michigan -- the ten thousand miles of shoreline, the navigation, fishery, recreation area. I'm familiar in general ways with the Scandinavian use of ice breakers. Winter navigation would benefit not only the U.P. but all of Michigan and all of the midwest.

Brennan: I think so; I don't see any particular problem with it. I think that would certainly be good for the economy of this area.

Esch: I think that we need to encourage an extended season in the Great Lakes because of the economic impact and future economic impact in Michigan -- especially into areas that really need it. So I've supported that effort in a related area. We have not spent sufficient funds. NOAA has not spent sufficient funds to aid both our commercial and our sports -- water -- industry here in Michigan. I've been getting after them the last two months. They've admitted they spent only 1.6 percent of their funds on the Great Lakes and that's not sufficient. We've finally got them talked into a 5-year plan. They are now going to re-chart all of the Great Lakes, which is very significant. They are going into a shore erosion program, which we announced yesterday. This is all related to year-round shipping or extended season shipping and I think that the environmental concerns that people have are being worked on and they are moving forward on an extended season.

Q: Congress has under consideration a proposal to require specific renewal by Congress every four years of all programs and to require each agency to start from ground zero each year in justifying its budget. Are such proposals workable and would you support them?

Brennan: I have an ambivalent feeling about it; ambivalence I guess is the feeling you get when your daughter comes home with a Gideon Bible under her arm. My feeling is this: the idea is a good idea, that some agencies ought to go out of business because they are no longer justifiable and the facts that caused them to be enacted in the first place no longer exist. But the reason for my ambivalence is a certain rather extensive experience, I think, with human nature. If you tell the head of an agency that's making $35,000 a year that his agency is going out of business in two years, I assure you the man is not going to think about anything else for two years -- eat, sleep, drink, everything else, worrying about how to keep that agency alive. Whatever the agency was organized to do, he's not going to do it because he's going to be too busy trying to think of how to keep it from going under. I don't know what the answer to that is except that any kind of procedures which are designed to streamline government and to make it more effective and more workable must take into consideration the natural dispositions of the human heart toward self-preservation.

Esch: I think it's workable and we're going to include a modified version of that as part of our alternative to Humphrey - Hawkins. What we propose is the first year take all programs relating to unemployed in the country -- employment insurance, welfare, food stamps, CETA bill, Job Training needs to be respected. On the other hand I am not opposed to enforcing and making effective some of the gun control legislation that's already on the books, carrying a concealed weapon, things of that kind, which are prohibited. I would not be necessarily opposed to some kind of civil liability legislation which would impose upon the manufacturers of firearms a civil liability perhaps without fault for injuries and death that is caused by the use of their products.

Q: Should we encourage winter navigation on the northern Great Lakes?

Huber: I'd like to encourage shipping any place, particularly overseas. We ought to push our development of foreign markets. At one time, I don't know what the statistic is today, but at one time one dollar out of seven in Michigan 10 years ago was from exports. I think we must regain our foreign markets and we ought to do everything we can to encourage that.

Baker: In my original statement of candidacy I emphasized the great importance of the Great Lakes Program, WIN -- take all of those and have Congress and Administration spend one year examining whether or not they are effective, wherein there's fraud, how to have a more effective delivery system. I think we can do that. I'd go further than that. I think I'd take all the agencies and departments of the government and I would put them in to a half a dozen or maybe 10 -- major departments and I'd do away with a lot of them. I'd do away with the duplication, I'd do away with the commissions and I'd put them in about 10 departments and then I'd take the committees of Congress, the House and Senate, and I'd restructure those along those same lines. Then I would have the Secretary and his three or four assistants come in for a minimum of 3 or 4 days every month and appear before the committees of Congress, where the members of Congress could ask questions specifically as to what they are doing in their departments and agencies. In '68 I wrote a chapter in a book on Congressional oversight and I think that we are ready now in the country not to pass any new legislation for a while. But probably the country ought to be better served by taking a few years to determine how effective the legislation is that we have now working, and where isn't it working and where can we remove waste? That probably is where the country should be going. I'd support the idea that before any regulation is passed, Congress ought to review it. ... And have 60 days to accept it or reject it. And before any agency or department proposes a new regulation, they ought to be asked to tell us how much it is going to cost the consumer.

Huber: Yes, I think's that workable. I think we ought to justify a program and ought to constantly upgrade them and see if they're needed. For example, who needs tea tasters? I think there are many things that could be thrown out if we wanted to go ahead and throw them out and stop some of the tremendous waste.

Q: What do you think is the fate of the big city? Can they be saved or are they doomed? In Michigan, are the mid-sized cities headed in the direction of Detroit?

Esch: I think it is going to survive in one form or another and I think we have neglected our cities in the last decade. Ever since we've had problems in our cities we haven't probably admitted that they exist and we have allowed a great deal to occur in the city. We've reached a situation where city services are non-productive in relationships to costs.

A classic case is New York City. I didn't support the President's proposal for bailing out New York City. I didn't vote for it and I didn't vote for bailing out Lockheed. If you believe in using a marketing mechanism that means that some people have to fail as well as win, but in the New York City case it is absurd for me to say that I'm paying for my three children's college education and people in New York City aren't paying for their college education. It's absurd that they have allowed the bargaining to reach the point in which they can get more on retirement than they can when they are working.

The services of the city have to be provided in a transportation to refining to distribution to retailing. They set the price of the product in every stage. For instance, they have kept independent refiners out by loading the profit into the crude so refining was a very marginal operation economically so that people who wanted to get into the oil business by buying crude, refining and selling it were finding they couldn't make any money in it. So the whole thing is operative in classic cartel.

DEMOCRATS ON: nuclear plants, fate of the cities

I want to go to a free market. I want to try to develop free market conditions in the petroleum industry and in order to develop free market conditions you're going to have to break up the major oil companies.

Riegle: We've got to speed up our efforts in terms of developing renewable energy sources. I really see solar energy, and not just energy that gets converted out of sun rays, but wind power as being a key part of the long-run answer for us. I also think we're going to have to use a lot of the coal resources in this country. I see nuclear power as sort of a transitional energy form; I don't see that as really the centerpiece of our long-run energy strategy. I see it as an interim form that we're into now, but I think our real answer up the road is going to be in the solar energy area.

Q: Should we continue to build nuclear power plants? What are the short and long range alternatives?

O'Hara: I think that on the whole we've had a pretty good safety record, the safety factors have pretty well been considered by the regulatory bodies. I have some reservations about the whole breeder reactor thing and I want to make sure that we're not going in the wrong direction with the breeder reactor, but in terms of more conventional nuclear power facilities I think the present safety procedures are generally adequate. If they have any weaknesses I think we ought to cure the weaknesses but I don't think we ought to in effect close down on the nuclear power.

Elsman: I think that any nuclear plant which is environmentally sound in the location in which it is proposed should be built because that has proved to be a great source of energy and offers a potential for the future in terms of energy which we can control the production of. The real question, though, is the nature of the environmental protection. There are so many questions of a realistic nature that have been raised in that area lately that I think it almost calls for a national inquiry to now set some reasonable policy on nuclear plants and preventing such from even having a 1/1000th chance of causing environmental damage that we should stop for the time being and reassess the charge toward nuclear plants.

Q: What do you think is the fate of the big city? Can they be saved or are they doomed? In Michigan, are the mid-sized cities headed in the direction of Detroit?

Riegle: The government must be committed to a new strategy for our cities, a strategy that will emphasize the needs of urban residents and not the are needed.

Cities need assistance in determining what their proper destiny and role should be. I am not just suggesting that money alone be thrown for the solution of these problems. I think the cities need technical assistance. They need some of the best minds we have in the nation focused on the problem, and I think the federal government can marshal these resources. The federal government can also help the cities with financial resources.

I feel we must deal firmly with the problem of crime in the city, but I think again the fact that we have so many youth, young people of employable age who are unemployed with nothing to do is a contributing factor. The fact that so much of the industry has left the city, has abandoned the city so to speak, is contributing. We must face the fact that there has been a neglect and try to determine what the proper role of the city should be so we can begin to plan toward some objectives.

Elsman: None should be allowed to die. The problem is not as serious as some would lead us to believe, if we accept simple principles. One of those principles is that federal revenue sharing does not fall from trees. It was our money sent to Washington, filtered through a bureaucracy and comes back in a lesser amount to us. I do not believe that is the solution. For one thing, it comes back less than we send and I don't like deals like that. Two, it comes back with political strings, as Coleman Young has found out in trying to deal with Gerald Ford in an election year. My solution is to put that problem in the hands of people who are always going to care. Detroit is Michigan's problem, it is not a problem of the United States of America. Michigander's have a self-interest in the preservation of Detroit. As a minimum, Michigan owes Detroit equal school facilities, which Detroit does not have. I am totally opposed to a tax-the-suburbs-to-help-Detroit type of approach as proposed by Milliken. I think through the vehicle of direct grants to the city of Detroit for specific purposes used by all citizens of Michigan, we enrichment of bureaucrats or grandiose construction programs. Here are the most important initial steps that must be the basis for a new strategy for the cities:

1) The federal government must begin by fixing up the damage it has done - starting with the HUD disaster. HUD has already destroyed whole neighborhoods and cost every citizen in Detroit 20 percent on his or her house. HUD must live up to its responsibilities and clean this mess up on a priority basis. And if HUD continues to prove its incompetence, then perhaps Washington should give the city of Detroit enough money and technical assistance, and let the city repair the disaster.

2) The federal government should give up a small proportion of its vast tax revenue by offering positive incentives to attract private investment that can begin to revitalize our cities. By means of an "Urban Development Tax Credit", the federal government could offer a corporate income tax credit for any industry or business capital invested in a core city area.

3) The impending bankruptcy threatening our cities could be turned around if the federal government assumed the total costs of certain welfare services. Cities simply do not have the tax base to support these massive expenditures, especially with many welfare standards being dictated by Washington.

4) General revenue sharing must be renewed and expanded, and reformed to give more money to local governments in needy areas. Revenue sharing would then be better able to alleviate some of the fiscal disadvantages facing our older industrial cities.

5) The federal government should give full support to innovative, locally-developed proposals such as the "Moving Detroit Forward" plan for Detroit's economic revitalization. "Moving Detroit Forward" would combine the efforts of the federal, state, and local governments, and the private sector, in a comprehensive approach that would provide jobs and industrial-commercial development, improve housing and transportation, and help reduce crime.

Austin: Not all big cities are in distress. There are some that are prospering. But here in Michigan our big industrial cities are suffering. I think it is related as much to change in our society, change in technology, and also to the fortunes of industries that are located here in Michigan. Michigan is primarily a one industry state, at least many of our cities are predominantly one industry automobile producing cities, and as the automobile industry has found it necessary to decentralize and locate its newer facilities in other locations, the cities have lost a great deal of their vitality. They have not only lost industry, jobs, but have lost people.

The city of Detroit's population has dropped one-third the last 20 to 25 years. That is quite a jolt for any community to overcome. The tax bases have shrunk and we are unable to maintain services at a level that is required by whatever population is in the city. And the population now is a poor population. It is an older population that is less able to pay for services which can save Detroit, because we as Michiganders, wherever we live, love that City.

O'Hara: Well we're going to have to do something about the deterioration of the cities. It's in what ways you should try to revive them that seems to me the crucial question. You can't just ignore the situation of the big city. The kinds of things that I object to as a method of curing the big problems of the city is the anti-suburban kind of thing, the city income tax, the commuting tax, tax on people who drive their cars into town, a refusal to build access roads so the people can live out of town and work in town, that whole coercive business to try to force people to live somewhere where they don't want to live. We have to recognize that the organization of urban America is changing, that no longer do we have a situation where all of the work is done downtown and all the people crowd around the perimeter. Shopping is moving out. Manufacturing is moving out. We're now devolved in a multi-centric city. I think it is getting that way because that's the way people want it. Fine. And if people want it that way and there is nothing wrong with running that way then by God that's the way it ought to go. But that doesn't cure the problem of what are you going to with this huge blighted city with these tremendous numbers of abandoned homes and with the high crime and with the poverty you know the whole bit. You're going to have to try to do something with those problems, but I don't say you can do it by trying to force people back into the mold of the European city and so that has been my approach.

Q: Should we encourage winter navigation on the northern Great Lakes?

Elsman: Governor Romney appointed me to the World Trade Advisory Council for Michigan and I came to the conclusion that the so called fifth seacoast of the United States in the Great Lakes was much under utilized as basically a problem of freeze up 6 months of the year and my whole international more efficient manner and I think the problem of non-productive employees has to be taken into an account. Now a very significant thing happened in San Francisco in this past year in that public officials, with the support of the public, said to the public employees "You have to be more productive". But the other questions are the inter-relationship between the home environment as related to school and the job employment. You can't have 55 percent of the kids in Detroit out in the street and expect a wholesome environment. Now there must be some way that we can get them back into doing something useful and back into school.

Huber: If you want to change Detroit, there's one way to do it. You've got to make it a safe place to live. You're never going to change it until it is a safe place to live. We're not trying to do that. We're trying to improve culture, we're trying to improve schools, and we're improving nothing. People continue to leave and we're trying to put a bandage over a cancer. Detroit has just refused to face up to what must be done because of the bleeding hearts who sympathize with Coleman Young's do nothing position and it will continue to deteriorate. It's got some tremendous things going for it. It's got a tremendous work force -- trained, skilled people looking for jobs -- it's got excellent facilities. You couldn't begin to build a plant anywhere in the United States similar to one you can go in Detroit now and buy 10 cents on the dollar. It's got water, it's got sewer, it's got all these things going for it.

The one thing that destroys it is that it will not enforce law and order and make a safe place to work. People will be attracted back to that city if you do some things. For instance, you take some of the homes that are selling in many of the areas for a half or a third of their price. You couldn't buy the quality that exists in those homes anywhere. You couldn't go out in a suburb and build a home for twice that and match it. It's there with all the attributes of a city, if that city was a good place to live in. We don't make it a good place to live in.

Baker: Cities occur for reasons that have very little to do with whether or not they should be saved. They occur because they are a transportation point, rivers meet, or where road intersect, or people gather. This is a process that's occurred since time immemorial. Detroit will always be there. It may change what it is, but it will always be there. Chicago will always be there because it's a focal point for commerce and intercourse of people. You have to look at the problems of the city in a perspective of time. A hundred years from now Detroit will be a very different city than it is today. There will be further deterioration and eventually be a process of rebuilding Detroit, but it's very long and it's even in the process now. It's very difficult, it's very expensive. It's tied to the problems of race, crime, economics all of the things that I've talked about. I have hope for the city. I think in the long term there will be a new occurrence but don't expect it in 10 years or 20.

Brennan: I guess I would have to speak with more knowledge about the city of Detroit than the others, since that was my home up until 5 years ago when I moved to East Lansing. The city of Detroit last annexed real estate in 1927, I believe, when the township of Redford was annexed to the city. I think one of the problems we are facing today is the fact that the cities have not been able physically to grow because they have been surrounded by boundaries of other incorporated communities and therefore the cities which had a natural growth for many, many years simply have bumped up against the wall, as it were, of other cities and had to stop growing territorially.

It seems to me that if the city is going to prosper, we have to look at their internal organization. One of the things that has to be brought to the major metropolitan cities it seems to me is a sense of community, a sense of living within a specific, identifiable community. We have developed this kind of concept of movement and almost a planned obsolescence and much of it has been because of the political organization of cities not having that real sense of community. How do you achieve it? One time years ago I proposed a division of the city of Detroit into 46 identifiable neighborhoods. Nobody quite understood what I was suggesting, but it seems to me that the neighborhoods were there then, that there are neighborhoods that can be identified and encouraged today. The people in those neighborhoods should be given the powers and right and authority to determine their own destiny. I think when they do, they can develop that sense of community and the cities can become more stable.

Q: Do you support the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill, which establishes 3 per cent as an acceptable unemployment rate and makes the government employer of last resort?

Huber: It's a bad bill. I don't think it solves the problem. I don't think we can afford the cost of that bill and I think the greatest effort to destroy it is not going to come from the Republicans, it's going to be the Democrats themselves because they're realistic enough to see it and they're effectively shooting it down. Obviously it's a good thing in an election year to gather a lot of support from people out of a job, but there are enough cool heads still left in Washington to put some brakes on the crazies.

Baker: I'd vote against it. It's a philosophical change. It is one of those turning points in this society. It makes the Government employer of last resort. This is a symbolic kind of change. It is a major change of direction. You can not accept the premise that the Government is an employer of last resort or in a philosophical sense that it should own the means of production, etc. and I think that's a very major turn.

Brennan: I read the bill, and it looks to me like a rather typical federal boondoggle in that if it creates employment, it's going to be mostly in the area of people who know how to apply for federal grants to study things. There's going to be a lot of employment for college professors as a result of Humphrey-Hawkins. Beyond that there is a very ambiguous proposition that says that everyone else who wants to work is entitled to be paid as part of a job-ready program at the local going wage, whatever that may be, which somehow has to be so figured that there is an economic motivation for them to go to work in the private sector. I don't know how you can pay them the going wage and still leave them so short that they have an economic motivation to go to work in the private sector. I think the problem with Humphrey-Hawkins, among other things is that it does not motivate people to seek employment.

Esch: The issue facing the country today, which permeates all of our discussion, is: Where does the expertise for this country lie? Is it with private industry and with individuals, or is it within government? For the last two or three decades, we have been moving more and more to suggest that the expertise lies within government, and it doesn't. It's been rejected in Great Britain, Italy has problems, every Western country has problems because they've moved so far that way. We're in danger and that's what the issue of this election is about -- because we have a question of whether we utilize the capability of private enterprise as opposed to the capability of the bureaucracy. That permeates the Humphrey-Hawkins bill. If you don't believe in utilizing a market mechanism and the private sector to create jobs, to move the country ahead to a higher standard of living, you must really like the post office. In 1972, people didn't just vote for McGovern or for Nixon, they voted on that issue and then we lost that whole momentum. Behind all the non-issue that Carter talks about, he supports national health insurance, taking over the total health industry; he supports Humphrey-Hawkins. The issues are hopefully going to be drawn for the people.

Q: Would you favor putting specific limits on the terms that could be served by public officials?

Brennan: I think it may have merit. I have always believed that a person's service in public office ought to be an interruption to his or her basic career. I think of myself even now as a lawyer, even though I haven't practiced law in a number of years, for a living, but I always feel I can go back to that in whatever I do. It seems to me that if a person approaches public service as an interruption to his or her career, that there can be a certain detachment from the decision-making that goes on. Again, however, bear in mind that you have to deal with the human heart. If you tell a Senator or Congressman he can only be in office for 12 years, he's going to get busy toward the end of it trying to figure out how to be a senator or something else, and so you will have to be careful how you circumscribe those rules.

Esch: I've supported Cedarburg's concept -- he had a constitutional amendment in for one, 6-year term for the president. I think that's wise. And they had three-year terms for Congressmen; I think that's pretty smart, too, because that's a little bit longer, and yet it's not too long. I'm in danger of saying how long a Congressman or Senator should be there, because I've been there 10 years already. I quite frankly don't think it should be a lifetime job. I think it does take some time to get to know what to do in the process; I think it's very difficult for the first few years to find that out. I'm not certain that a Congressman should be there for more than 10 or 12 years. I've been in the Congress for more than 5 terms, I don't think I should be in the Senate for more than 5 terms.

Huber: No, I think that's a wrong approach. I don't see that a man produces his best necessarily in 12 years. I look at my brother, who's a neurosurgeon and who's at the height of his powers today. He's been working at that profession about 25 years. I look at the guys who are the top men in their fields. They are not men of 10 or 12 years experience, on the average. I think it's wrong to deny a man the right to utilize his abilities. Now, I realize you run into the problem of senility with some of the situations you have in the Congress, but that's a different kind of a problem and I think it's a problem Congress could correct without having to limit terms. There are some brilliant people we would be denying ourselves the use of if we mandate a 12 year House or Senate term.

DEMOCRATS ON: sunset laws, federal welfare subsidies, gun control law practice had been involved in counseling shipping companies, freight forwarders -- I know this area. I think that the seaway can be kept open all year round and that the lakes can and that they should because it is a cheaper way to get goods either from our great manufacture centers to our export market or from foreign sources to us.

O'Hara: Well I think we have to take a hard look at it like we do everything else. Recently GAO came out with an analysis of the Corps of Engineers cost benefit estimates on the whole winter navigation program in which they were very critical of the way the Corps of Engineers had approached the problem.

I think before we go full length into it we've got to find out if the benefits are worth the cost. I'm a very strong promoter of increased commerce on the lakes but I want to know what I am doing. I want to know how much it's costing me to get what and therefore I'm insisting that we don't make any major commitments to the program until we have the results of the study and know what we're doing.

I'm Chairman of the Conference of Great Lakes Congressmen. I would think I'm probably as much involved in problems of the Great Lakes as any member of the Congress and I'm very strong for improvement. But I just want to make sure that we do have our ducks all in a row and we know what we are doing.

Riegle: I think that one of the great potentials of our state is to make better use of our waterways. I think Detroit could become an international port of enormous consequence. In developing a longer run economic plan for the state, that's got to be a centerpiece in that plan and that's something that I'd like to help make happen as a new Senator.

Q: Congress has under consideration a proposal to require specific renewal by Congress every four years of all programs and to require each agency to start from ground zero each year in justifying its budget. Are such proposals workable and would you support them?

Riegle: I've also been active in the move to accomplish that very thing and I do think that that's sound and I do think it's necessary and I think it's accomplishable. I want to see that happen.

Austin: I not only think it's workable, I think we ought to be very definitely moving in that direction. I feel that if we're going to squeeze the water out of our government expenditures, then periodically we should require a justification for a program as well as a determination whether -- even in a worthwhile program -- the dollars we spend are being spent wisely.

Elsman: I'd go farther. I'd say that I would review it every day. Practically speaking I would review it every year because of the nature of the fiscal year budget but four years is too long. If we've got a rotten program that has not been cost effective, we've tried to make the point before, like any business, you review it every day and as a minimum you review it every year when you set your budget for the next year.

Q: Michigan has historically received federal welfare aid on a 50-50 matching basis while some southern states receive aid on an 80-20 federal state basis. Is this fair? What can be done about it?

Austin: I believe that we ought to have a federal standard that is uniform throughout the country. I think we've got to have some uniform standards if we expect to bring our welfare program into practical context. As it is now, there are tendencies for people to move from state to state looking for a better deal, and some of the states are disadvantaged because of the burdens of welfare. I feel Michigan is perhaps one of the states that is disadvantaged, not only in welfare, but I think we are disadvantaged in some other respects. Michigan is among the northern industrial states that seem to be losing economic vitality while another band of states, often referred to as the sun belt states, are deriving a great deal more of our federal tax dollars than they pay. I think we have got to examine the priorities in Washington and the way in which the tax dollars are being allocated to make absolutely certain that Michigan gets its fair share, because Michigan is just about the bottom of the list of those states that sends a great deal more to Washington than we are getting.

Elsman: In terms of distribution first, I'm quite upset that it's obvious when you analyze statistics, that Michiganders send more money to Washington than comes back to them, whereas this is not true for certain southern states which have disproportionate power in the Congress. I would seek to change that and to equalize to a certain extent the so-called revenue sharing comeback or whatever -- if I accept that, which I generally don't, because I am a state's rights advocate of most programs.

Now in regard to welfare itself, you're going to start learning now about what a conservative Democrat is all about, because Michigan has never known such before. I first of all believe in a 10 percent federal cut in the welfare budget. Those departments will have to determine where that 10 percent comes from. Incidentally, this 10 percent item applies to all governmental budget items, except interest, which obviously can't be cut. That's George Wallace type of talk, but it makes sense to me. Let's face it, Health, Education and Welfare is our biggest budget item. It's a surprise to most people -- they think defense is, but defense isn't even close. If you've got a problem with inefficiency, you audit it, in business.

Welfare has to be scrutinized very carefully, mixing business principles with humanitarian concerns for cases like those who are in need. We simply haven't done that, it's gotten out of hand. Let me tell you, the state of Michigan in this fiscal year has incurred $600 million in an unemployment debt which it eventually has to pay to the federal government -- it has borrowed this money to meet one aspect of welfare. That figure is astounding.

O'Hara: The Michigan delegation or at least a fair number of the Michigan delegation have been fighting those kinds of allocations ever since I've been in Congress. We've haven't had the votes is the essential thing. For instance, the allocation formula for Title I Elementary Secondary Education Act Funds is based to a large extent on the per-capita income of the state and the number of residents of the state whose income falls below a certain level, which very heavily slants it toward the rural south and the rural midwest. When it comes time to get the votes some of the central cities join in with the rural south because although their states don't benefit from the formula, central cities get more. For instance when I offered to change the formula in the Elementary Secondary Education Act to take out a lot of that poverty base I was opposed by a coalition consisting of central city Congressmen and rural Congressmen including John Conyer and Charlie Diggs. Michigan got more but Detroit might not do as well. This is one of the oldest fights that we've ever been involved in.

Riegle: What's been happening in recent years is that industrial states like Michigan have been capital exporters through the federal government to other states in the country. We pay in a lot more than we get back and that money makes it way through the federal government machinery and goes to the south, a lot of it goes to the southwest. It's been like a domestic Marshall plan where states like Michigan find themselves really picking up the tab increasingly for activities in other parts of the country. I don't think that is fair; I don't think it's good sound, long-run national strategy and I think states like Michigan now are in real economic trouble and the welfare problem is just a part of it. One of the very, very difficult problems that the country has to solve is how we really overhaul and redesign the welfare system generally. That's as tough a problem to find an answer to as any we face in terms of overhauling, reforming the welfare system.

I think you need to establish some minimum federal standards. I think we ought to tie in to that requirement that states be obligated to pay an equivalent share of those benefits in the other states, so that you don't have states like Michigan subsidizing other states. But it's going to be awfully hard to accomplish that because it's one thing to say it needs to happen, but then if you go and look at how the Congress is organized and run, virtually every committee chairman of consequence is someone who comes from the south. They're people who got their committee chairmanships not based on merit but based on seniority. I object to that system; I fought to change it, and have changed it in part in the House. We need to change it in the Senate. But until we really change the seniority system, we're not going to change the practice that's been built into the system of legislators from the south really pork-barreling out of the government out of the government in a whole variety of programs really more than their fair share.

Q: What is your position on gun control?

Elsman: I got my buck last year on my land in Clare County with my son at 12:30 on opening date -- one of the greatest experiences of my life. I never want that life style to change or be threatened in any way. A true Michigander understands that. I think that the constitution guarantees that the government stays out of this area and I certainly will work to beat the government out of the area.

O'Hara: I have favored prohibition of the manufacture and sale of the so-called Saturday night special. We prohibited the importation, it was largely an importation problem, but the legislation somehow neglected to prohibit the importation of the parts. What we discovered was that all they were doing was importing the parts and assembling them here. Nothing had happened. I favor extension of that ban so the same kinds of guns that you've now been prohibited from importing and have been under the law you will be prohibited of manufacturing in the U.S. and selling in the U.S. I do not favor anything else at this time.

Riegle: I don't think it's practical or desirable to try to take everybody's guns away from them. I think the laws we have on the books in this state are good ones and if they were enforced, as they are often not, I think that would be a big help in terms of reducing the misuse of guns. In almost every case where guns are used in crimes, they are used in violation of laws. To add another tier of laws by itself, I don't know that it would make any great dent in the problem.

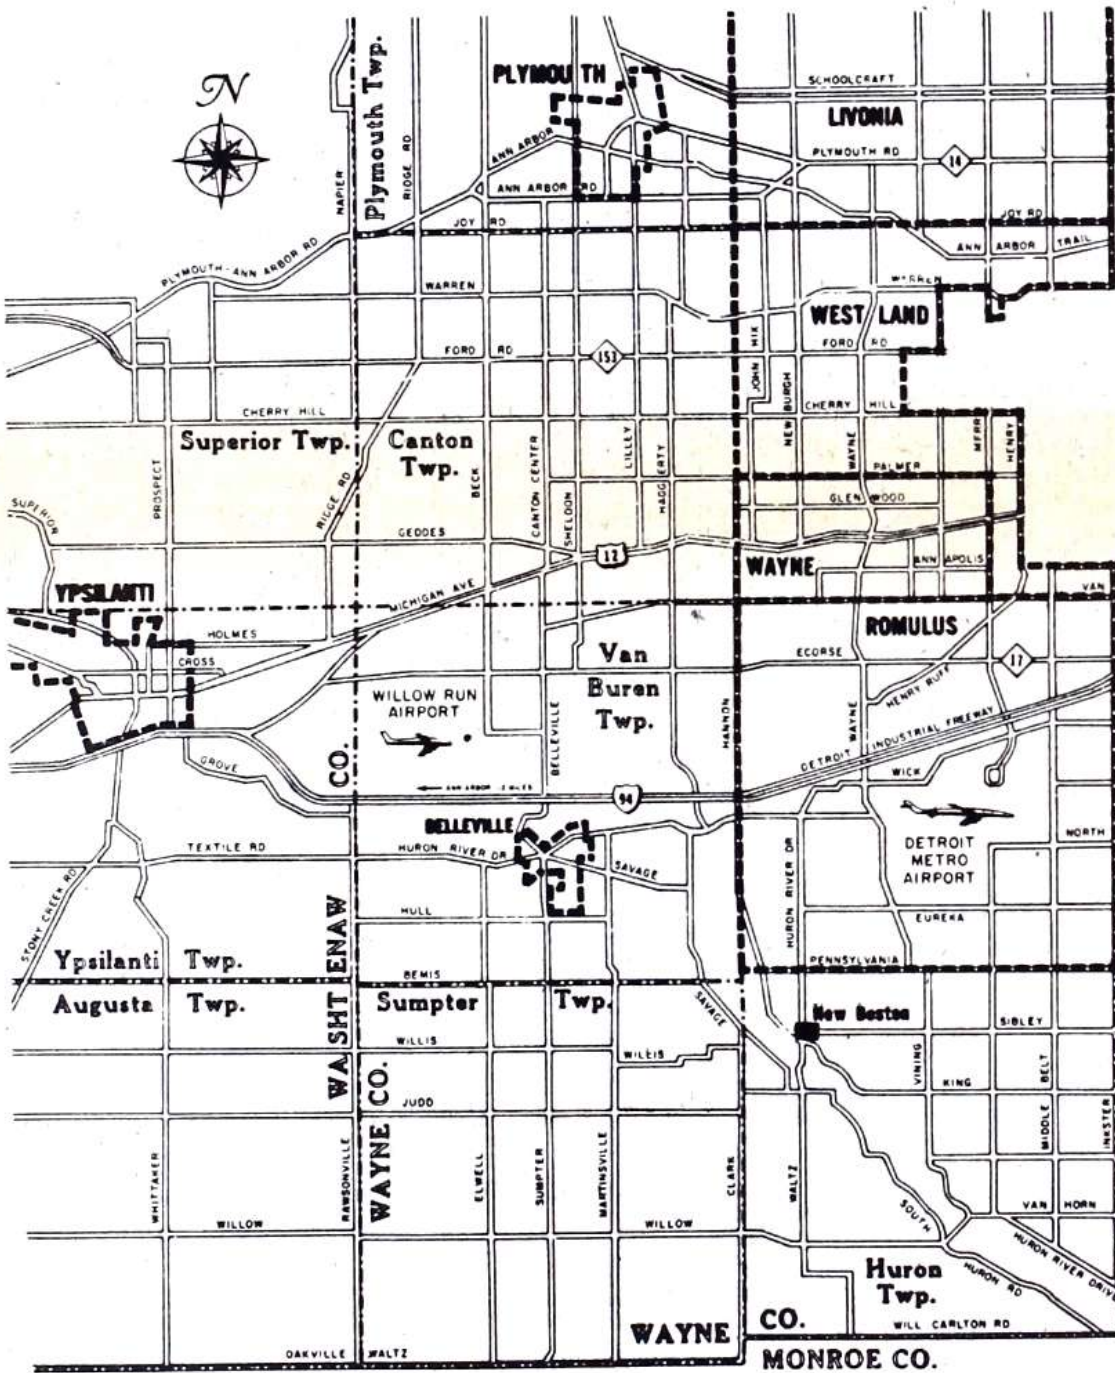

I also don't think that you can ask people to disarm when you can't provide the public safety, and we're not providing the public safety today.

To allow the manufacture and wide-scale distribution of Saturday Night Specials, cheap handguns, for one purpose and that's to stick somebody up or mug somebody on the street is ridiculous. The widespread availability and distribution of those cheap guns that are essentially for the purposes of crime does not make sense.

HOW TO SELECT MELONS

Watermelon should look relatively smooth. The underside should be a creamy-yellow color and the ends filled out and rounded. If buying a cut melon, look for firm juicy red flesh with dark brown or black seeds. Refrigerate cut watermelons and keep whole ones at room temperature.

Cantaloupe should have a heavily netted skin and if properly vine-ripened, will have a sunken smooth scar at the stem end. Ripen at room temperature for two to four days. A yellowish skin cast and a sweet aroma also indicate ripeness. Once ripe, refrigerate the melon.

Honeydew is a large, oval melon with a pale green sweet meat. Look for a soft velvety skin with a creamy yellow (not green) skin. It should have a pleasant odor and a slight softness at the blossom end. It can be held at room temperature a couple of days and should be served at room temperature for best flavor. If ripe refrigerate.
